Stouffville Fire Brigade made a double run on Saturday. A forenoon call brought the brigade to the Hopkins home near the hospital where a hot chimney had got out of control. No damage resulted. Only a couple of hours later a second alarm was sounded, this time to the Andy Green farm on the edge of town. A brooder stove had taken fire but the smoke was quickly noted by some men working nearby who hurried in the alarm. The outbreak was soon squelched with no loss to the building or chicks.

Elephants in the United Church

If you didn't call around at the United Church last Saturday afternoon, you missed something. What? The White Elephant and Variety Sale. It was a great success. Or, if you did not see the versatile minister of the church driving a vehicle you never expected to see him driving when he went to the west end of town to pick up plants, elephants and ladies, you again missed something.

In the basement there was a fish pond for children, and Roger Mole's party visited this department as part of his birthday festivities. There was a table of African Violets, which was completely sold out; and the afternoon tea was well patronized. Delectable home-made bread, rolls, cakes, cookies and candy disappeared like snow in July. One lady, carrying in two angel cakes made by a justly famed cook, which cakes were attractively parcelled in cellophane, found she had three men following hard after her to the home baking table; and as she passed the cakes over the counter, the men shouted "SOLD" in unison.

There were home-made rugs for sale. In the line of poultry, there were no feathered friends; but there was a China hen setting, which I doubt not had been setting for generations. There were fresh eggs in cartons. Then there were the familiar "hen-and-dickens" gardeners grow, and which look like green rosettes.

Outside there was a musical instrument and a little hammer with which to play it, which appealed to anyone of musical inclination. It looked like an auto harp—but it bore the proud title of Mandolin Guitar. It had a bewitching tone. Then there was the wicker cradle, in wonderfully good shape. Before that was sold there was a verbal contract entered into, which bound the salesperson to come and rock the cradle whenever it's occupant became cross. A high chair, in which one of our middle-aged men was reared, was there. A bit of the edge of the table was broken off, which his mother explained he did when he was mad one day. Pictures and frames there were, in a variety of size and style.

There were perennials and glad bulbs and shrubs and houseplants. There was a bouquet of beautiful pansy faces in variety of colour, framed in the green of maiden-hair fern. A lovely old platter with gray well stood on a table with an astounding variety of vases, ornaments and dishes of all sorts. Then there was a heavy old wheelbarrow, which one lady put in, remembering the tons and tons she had helped to carry on it. Another lady declared the evening before the sale she intended to buy the barrow, she needed it. And so she did! They say it's a man's world; but it's amazing how many women rise far enough in it to exercise the snow shovel and push the wheelbarrow!

When the wind suddenly blew hard, some of the articles for sale flew. A bread mixer stood by a little electric warming and baking unit. There were bookshelves and bookends and books. Perhaps the high-light of the sale was the little collie pup donated by Mrs. S. Davies. The children couldn't resist it. One brown-eyed girl stood quietly for long stretches, the motherless pup cradled in her arms, both looking content with the world. But it was a larger boy who suddenly appeared with the cash, and carried home the little collie.

Some of the unsold elephants have been stabled away until an auction sale appears on the horizon; when they will be led forth to be converted into legal tender. Now that this sale sponsored by the Woman's Association is over, one can only lean back and say: "Strange how a sale like this touches the heart-strings, playing tender melodies of gracious by-gone days!"

Miss Hoover is eighty-three, and while no bones were broken, the elderly lady received a nasty shaking up, and bruised back. Mr. Lud Hoover visited his sister in Toronto on Sunday.

Mrs. A. V. Nolan, Mrs. A. Griffiths, and Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Nolan were in Toronto on Tuesday attending the funeral service for the late Charles Gansler, brother-in-law of the late Albert V. Nolan. The late Mr. Gansler was a veteran of the first war, and had been an employee of the T. Eaton Co. for thirty-two years. Only two weeks previous he attended the funeral in Stouffville of the town's late Reeve, and was in apparent good health. He is survived by his widow, the former Mabel Nolan, one son William, a twin sister and three brothers all in England.
