The Lure of Ownership

There is a pride in ownership that sometimes tempts men to acquire properties they would be better without.

A certain city is served by two public utilities, each of which holds patents that give it a monopoly of its own products. But their products compete with each other and are sold at competitive prices.

One of these utilities is owned and operated by the municipality itself, which furnished the capital to establish it and operates it through an independent commission.

The other is owned and operated by a company of private citizens who invested their own money in the enterprise.

Both companies are well managed, both give good service to the public and both are good employers.

The privately-owned company pays large sums into the city treasury every year as taxes on its property and also large sums to the government as taxes on its profits. Up to the present it has been able to pay reasonable dividends to its shareholders.

The publicly-owned corporation pays no taxes and no dividends. All its profits go into reserves, to be used for its own purposes.

One would think that the citizens would be anxious to see the privately-owned company continue to operate, not only for the sake of the taxes it pays, but also for the healthy competition it offers to their own municipal plant.

Most of the citizens take that view. But there is an element among them that would gladly sacrifice these substantial benefits in order to be able to make the vain boast that their city owns all its utilities and nobody makes any profit out of them.

Western Girl in Eastern Sulky Race Circuit

Jacqueline Sharpe of Beechy, Sask., is one of Canada's sulky drivers. She is doing the eastern circuit of the trotting races now, driving her father's horse.

Hello Homemakers! An ideal picnic lunch is one that does not involve a lot of baking or mixing, don't you agree? For a pleasant picnic just pack a few things on the spur of the moment to eat at a different location. Roadside picnics are becoming more popular today and in many instances it's only courteous to eat lunch on the way to visit friends. By the way, do you know that the Ontario Department of Highways place more than 22,000 tables along the wayside for picnickers.

The menu that often fills the bill and the picnickers too, may be weiners in rolls with relish or mustard, potato chips, small tomatoes, fresh melon and spoons for each, along with a thermos of cold fruit juice or hot coffee and paper cups.

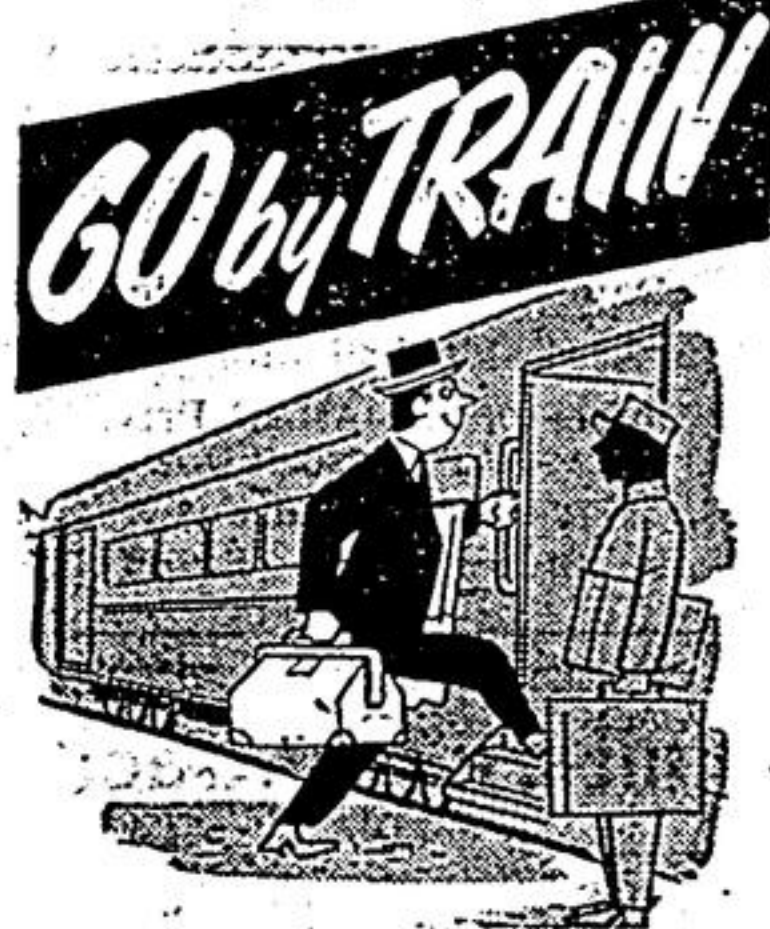

A second-helping lunch may be sandwiches of cold meat, peanut butter and egg salad, radishes, green onions and carrot slivers (a salt shaker for green) cheese and crackers and fruit juice or milk with plastic tumblers.

Everyone expects pick-up items on a picnic. We like eggs cooked-in-shell, fried chicken pieces, cubes of cooked ham, wedges of cheese, buttered bread, raw fruit and tarts or cookies.

cloth wrung out of clear water and then a dry cloth. If the wood becomes soaking wet it will swell and open at the seams.

9. Cover all food and store in a cool place.

10. Wash food to be served raw before it is cut or served. Even berries should be rinsed by placing them in a sieve, cover, then submerge in a bowl of cool water. This prevents crushing the berries.

11. Wash your hands in soapy water more often than you think is necessary.

THE SUGGESTION BOX

1. To carry milk without a thermos pour it into a sealer, place on the rubber ring and seal securely. Immerse in a pail containing cold water and cover.

2. To keep sandwiches moist, wrap in wax paper, then in a dampened towel.

3. Transport cookies in a box so they do not break.

4. If you build a fire to make tea or coffee at a picnic, notice which way the wind is blowing and light on the leeward side.

5. If you picnic near sand, clean the dishes and utensils with clear sand.

6. If you sit in the sun to eat, keep your hat on so that it protects the back of the neck.

7. Never go swimming for an hour after eating.

8. Be sure to clear away all your debris before leaving picnic site.
