Late J. H. Yake Was Born in Stouffville

John H. Yake, born 56 years ago in Stouffville, and a well-known merchant of Napanee, died at his home there last week. He had been in ill health for three years. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ira Yake, died when he was an infant, and he lived with his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Yake here until he grew up.

When he was 17 he enlisted with the 72nd Highlanders of Vancouver and spent nearly three years in overseas service. On his return to Canada he was engaged in business with his uncle at Millbrook. Later he took a position with a chain store chain and served in several locations prior to going to Napanee nineteen years ago.

In his earlier life he was a member of the United Church and the "Rotary Club."

Mr. Yake is survived by his wife, the former Irene Francy, and by three children. He also leaves two grandchildren; two brothers, George of Regina, and Dr. J. C. Yake, Spokane, Wash., and one sister, Mrs. W. J. Armstrong of Avonlea, Sask.

Fat, Jolly Santa Almost New; Gaunt Figure For Many Years

When Clement Moore wrote his classic, The Night Before Christmas, in 1822, he described Santa Claus almost exactly as Americans of all ages think of him today. He portrayed the legendary old gentleman as rply-poly, broad-faced with merry dimples, twinkling eyes and cheeks like roses. St. Nick, wrote Moore, was chubby and plump, merry, lively and quick, "a right jolly old elf." However, reading of a Santa described in those terms must have been puzzling to both parents and children of the 1820's. For the Santa of that era—and of many eras before then—was a tall, angular fellow whose only physical similarity to Moore's image was his white beard. Moore was almost a century ahead of his time.

In the years between then and now, Santa has known almost as many characterizations as there have been artists to draw him. In turn, he has been tall and thin, short and wispy, gaunt and ragged and, most recently, a portly, strapping old fellow.

Nowadays, to picture Santa as anything but huge, pink and happy would start a major uprising.

Miss Jeannette Lee, who is supervisor of creative art for a Kansas City greeting card company, has been researching Santa's historical appearance for nearly a dozen years now. Some 50 artists, working under Miss Lee, have collaborated on no less than 40 different paintings of the old gentleman for 1949 Christmas cards.
