Dr. and Mrs. A. C. Kennedy have returned from a trip to the land of the "Midnight Sun" which they started the last week in May. They travelled about 16,000 miles by car, also enjoying a boat trip. At the beginning of their journey they were accompanied by their son, Dr. Glen Kennedy and his wife as far as Edmonton. They returned home by plane, Dr. A. C. and Mrs. Kennedy then travelled over the Alcan Highway to Dawson Creek, from there on the road is called the "Alaska Highway" to Fairbanks, Alaska. It passes through Whitehorse, Yukon. The distance from Dawson Creek to Fairbanks is 1,527 miles. Over this part of the road which was good they travelled leisurely taking one week. Reasonable accommodation was available for night stops. The travellers found Whitehorse to be quite a thriving town, with many substantial modern buildings. It is connected by railway to the Port of Skagway. Tourists taking the boat trip up the coast go to Whitehorse to spend a night and see this famed mining town of the Gold Rush era. Fairbanks was found to be a town of good size, a bustling place with several very good hotels and accommodation in them was taxed to the limit. Fairbanks was the point of departure by plane for Barrow—a trip of about three hours. Barrow, a former American army camp, is on the Arctic Ocean, well within the Arctic Circle. While the army was at Barrow, the Eskimos earned good money, built frame houses—every stick of lumber must be brought in—bought electric appliances, etc. The settlement was left pretty flat, when the army pulled out. However, there is now an effort to attract tourists. A small hotel and restaurant have been constructed out of old army buildings. The community retains a good school and hospital. Eskimos run the hotel, feed the tourists reindeer steaks, and take them on dog sled trips.
The Kennedy's enjoyed one of these sled-trips while at Barrow and also enjoyed the Eskimo cooking and reindeer steaks. They have a clipping from the News-Miner—a paper published at Fairbanks, headed, "Pt. Barrow News Item", written by Guy A. Okakok, the local Eskimo correspondent, in which they are mentioned among the visitors. They were the first Canadian tourists to visit Barrow. The News Column gives the temperature on June 24th as 50 at noon and 48 at midnight. Since the sun doesn't set, the children seem to play out in the streets most of the night. Another place of historic interest visited was Dawson City, which can now be reached by road, not yet in very good condition, but passable. While some mining is still carried on in Dawson District, the town shrank to a few hundred inhabitants. The Kennedys visited one ancient "Sourdough" 78 years of age who was still working away in his isolated property, and appeared to be quite content with his solitary existence. He took them into the tunnel of his mine, lighting the way by candle. The travellers expected to return to Vancouver by boat, from Skagway. However, accommodation was not available at the time, so they made the return trip by car. Then from Vancouver they took the round trip by a C.N.R. ship, along the Coast to Skagway. They found this ten-day trip very enjoyable. They also visited Vancouver Island and found it very attractive.
A very pleasant time was spent on Sunday afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Weir, Unionville, when about forty-five relatives gathered for their annual picnic. Friends were present from Pennsylvania, Toronto, Markham, Scarborough, Brampton, Schomberg, Willowdale, and Unionville.
