ROUTE 50 IS TRUCKERS' H(E)AVEN

THERE'S AN OLD ADAGE that claims that where truck drivers stop, there a motorist can find good food. One spot where this certainly is true is on six-lane-wide Route 50, in Cicero, Ill., in a place called Truck Haven. Here long-distance truckers can have their vehicles serviced and refueled while they eat in an air-conditioned restaurant. After dinner, many drivers on long hauls check in for a night's lodging in one of the soundproofed upstairs rooms, where there are 36 comfortable bunks. The lounge has a television set, radio-phonograph, desks, card tables for a friendly game or two, and phone booths for keeping in touch with headquarters. In the downstairs dining area, good food is featured at reasonable prices. Typical meal is broiled filet mignon, mushroom caps, bread basket and combination salad bowl for $1.55 tab. Cities Service built it.

All through the night, the big trucks roll into Truck Haven, which has 16 pumps on duty.
