EVERY NIGHT in the week it's square dance time in Tucson, Ariz., with dozens of clubs putting out the country style music. They're members of Belles and Beaux club.

FOR A SAFER LANDING

FOR THE FIRST TIME the general public has seen the method used overseas by the United States Air Force to stop crippled aircraft. For those of us who couldn't attend the showing at Wright-Patterson base in Dayton, O., here are some pictures of it. An F-86 is preparing to test a runway barrier. Maj. Raymond Hunt, piloting his craft at 100 miles an hour, then plows into the nylon netting. A net flips a cable up into the plane's landing gear. The jet drags 45,000 pounds of chain attached to the cable into a tangled heap — but the plane stops within about 500 feet. The system is roughly similar to the arresting gear used on Navy carriers.

Springy nylon netting is set up while Major Hunt climbs into his jet (background).

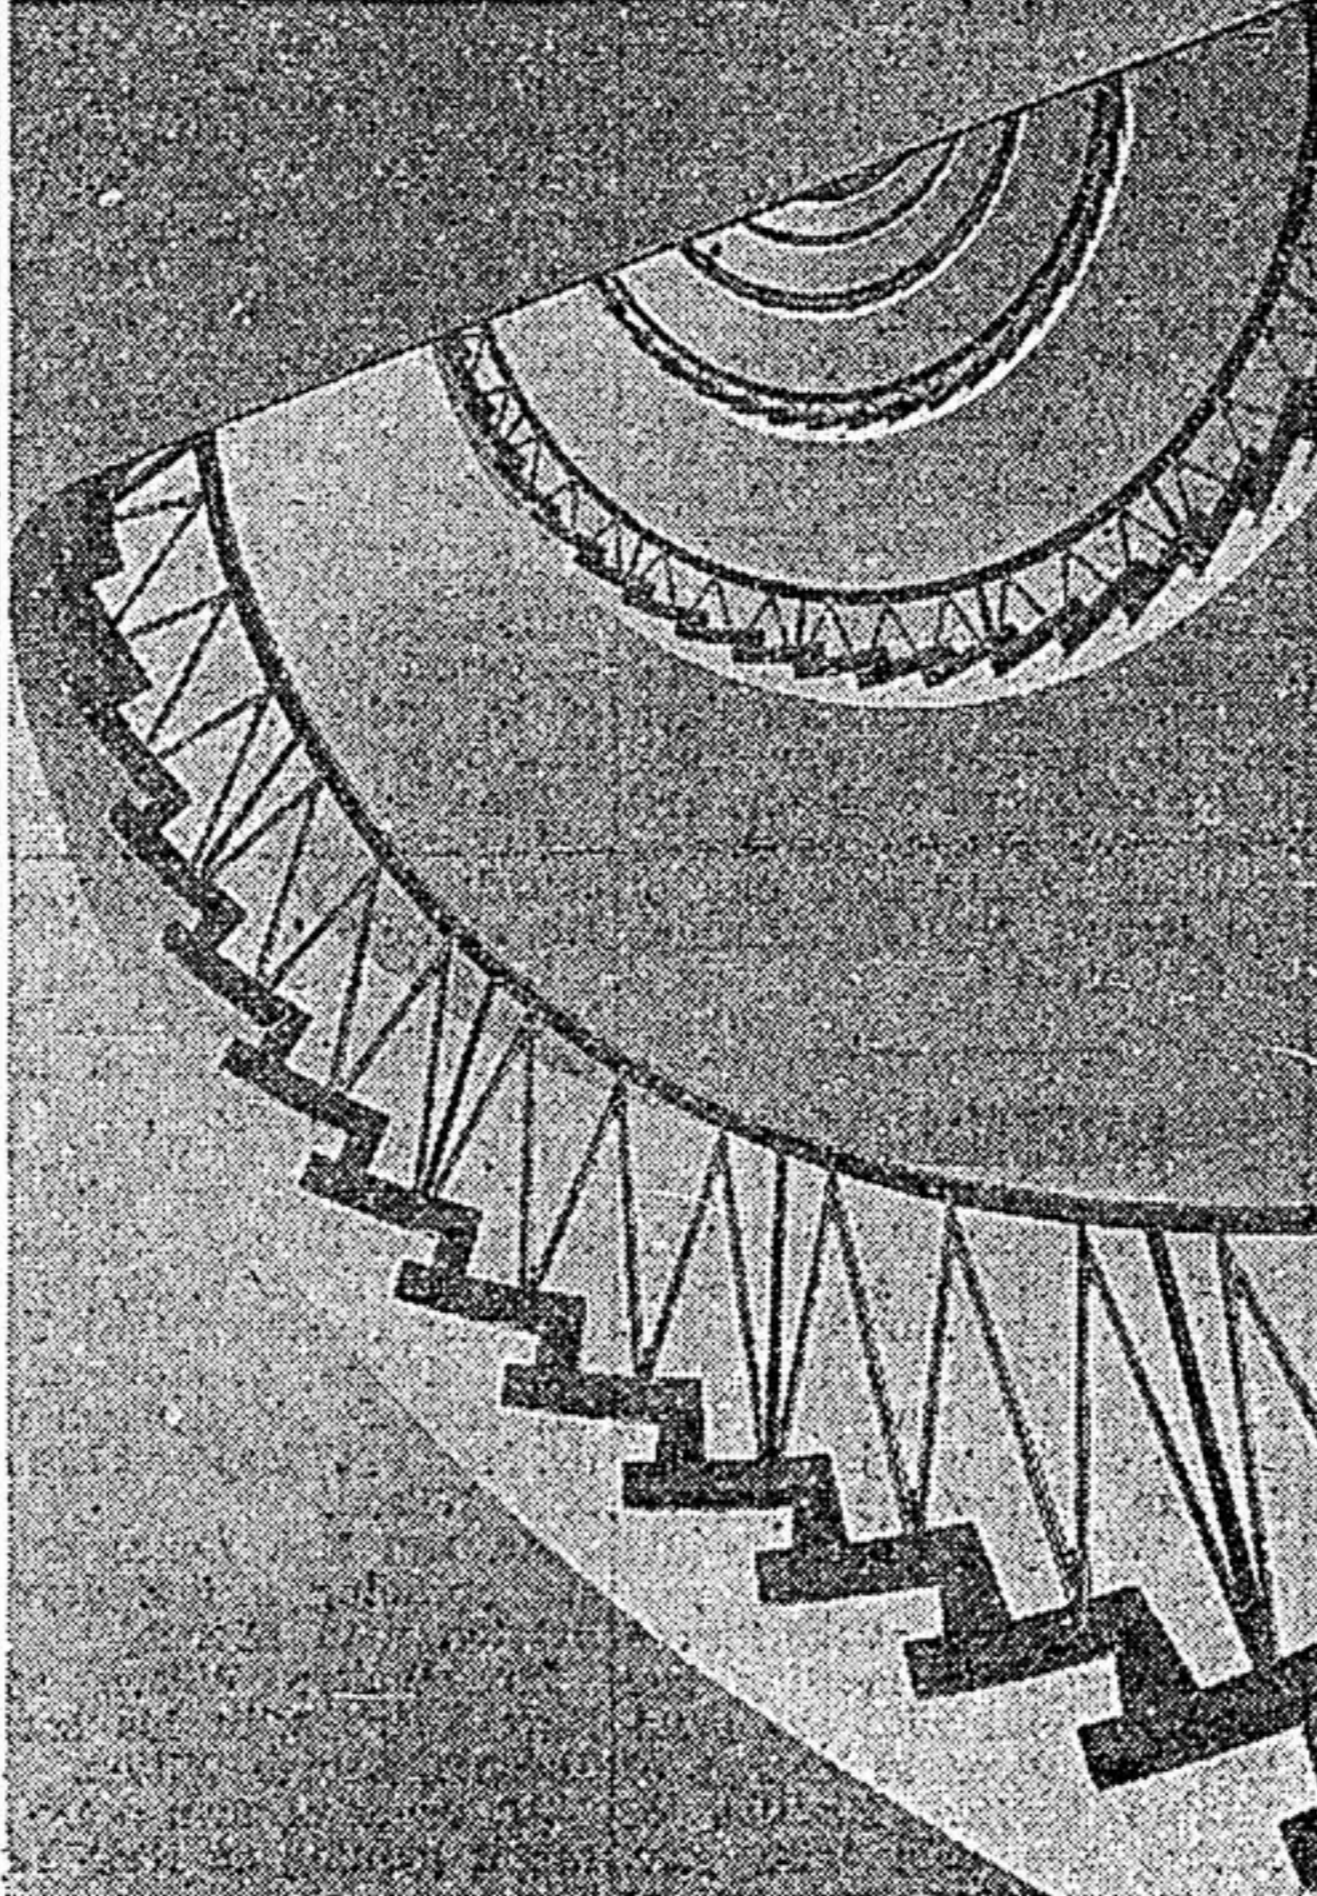

High-speed cameras and electronic equipment record test as plane rams into netting.

Heavy chains stop the aircraft. Device is already on order for 23 other Air Force bases.

WHEN MILITARY CHIEFS come to a NATO committee meeting at the Pentagon, the cloak-room shelf is filled with brass and braid. WAF Sgt. Lucille Baay of Electric City, Wash., puts Adm. Arthur Radford's hat on top of the pile of crowded hats.

TO CUT DOWN the deafening roar of jet engines, a British firm has come up with an open pen and muffler at South Marston, England, factory. The plane is moved into the pen by tractor with the end of the jet exhaust centered in the opening of the muffler. The noise level is reduced and it causes no annoyance at one thousand yards.

MAKING LIKE a movie star in a musical comedy, Maggi McDonnell gets a slipper full of French champagne aboard the liner Liberte in New York. Champagne is destined for American holiday tables. Maggi is the "Sweetheart of French Champagne."
