Heath Unit Widening Services to Schools

During the month of January 1,110 children in public and separate schools had a health inspection by the public health nurse of the local Health Unit. Included in this were 417 vision tests performed by using the proven and reliable Snellen chart testing system.

The vision testing program in public and separate schools in York County is based on the best medical advice obtainable at the present time. It uses the most reliable time-tested techniques of screening the vision of large numbers of pupils for referral for eye examination by more competent eye specialists. The Snellen chart screening system is not claimed to be a complete eye examination, but is a screening method to detect questionable visual performance and possible vision defects. Numerous other methods of vision testing are known, but none has yet proven capable of displacing the Snellen Chart system in its use in the school health program. The York County Health Unit school vision testing methods are based upon recommendations of Dr. A. Lloyd Morgan, eye specialist in charge of children's eye clinic at the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto, and professor of Ophthalmology at the University of Toronto.

About 27% of school children have some vision defect, and require attention. Of these about half already wear glasses or are under treatment and known to the parents. The remainder, when detected by the reservation of symptoms or by vision testing in the school, are attention of the parents for further investigation. Not all children or adults with vision defects require glasses or special treatment. Contrary to the ideas of some alarmists, many vision defects in children are not progressive, and do not necessarily become worse with age. Many temporary defects in vision are due to disease elsewhere in the body. Therefore, rather than immediately having an eye examination, a child should be seen by his family physician for general examination if he has symptoms such as seeing objects double, car sickness, inability to remember what has been read, frequent sties, difficulty in learning to ride a bicycle, restlessness, nervousness, irritability, or other unaccounted-for behaviour, any or all of which symptoms may be due to a multitude of common diseases.
