Health Unit Restaurant Inspection

(Editor's Note — This is the first in a series of articles designed to better acquaint the residents of this district with the work of their County Health Unit. Further articles in this series will be presented to the readers of The Tribune during the next few weeks.) From the standpoint of preventing the spread of communicable diseases and the contraction of illnesses from the consumption of unwholesome foods, there is no more important inspection than that of places where foods and drinks are prepared and sold to the public for consumption upon the premises. Such places include restaurants, lunch counters, refreshment stands, hotel kitchens and dining rooms, etc. Present day industrial and social conditions have made of the eating place a great public institution, where a great number of workers lunch daily, and where many people breakfast, lunch and dine regularly. It is, therefore, one of the important responsibilities of the Health Unit, as well as of the vicinalling business, to ensure that, in so far as lies within their powers only strictly wholesome foods are used, and that every practical precaution is taken during their storing, preparation, handling, and serving to prevent their deterioration and contamination. These certain requirements by the Health Unit, if applied, will go far to guarantee to the consumer the wholesomeness and the safety of the foods he is served. A regular inspection is made by the sanitary inspector of all eating establishments in the country, to ensure that the premises are kept clean and painted, the foods properly handled, stored, and refrigerated, that the dishes are properly washed and sterilized (verified by means of a swab test), that an adequate supply of potable water is available, that sanitary accommodation is provided and properly maintained, and that personnel are acquainted with proper care in handling foods and in matters of personal hygiene, etc. It is the aim and desire of the Health Unit to have every eating establishment inspected at least once a month.
