PATHETIC VIGIL—John Rooney and his four-year-old son, John, gaze out on the waters of Reynolds channel, New York, where the swift tides swept another son, Patrick, to death. The boy lost his balance and fell in trying to pull up bucket of water.

HONO-LULU — This Easter, many Hawaiian cuties wish they could wear these authentic Easter Island headpieces on Waikiki beach. Sundresses and leis are worn Easter and year 'round there.

ANSWERING THE CALL—American evangelist Billy Graham packs Kelvin hall in Glasgow, Scotland, where thousands came to hear his "Crusade for Christ" tour. Converts can be seen leaving their seats to join those filing past Graham on the rostrum (center). Outside the hall, police were busy untangling a major traffic jam.

NOT THREADBARE—Tom Brennan, Chicago father of eleven children, makes sure his six sons and five daughters get Easter clothes. He's making them as family watches.

RESORTING TO THE SHOVEL—Off the roof of the North Rim lodge at Grand Canyon, Ariz., goes another shovelful of snow as Louis Hillis keeps resort ready for summer.

SAME OLD ARMY—Who was the guy who said that an army travels on its stomach? Cpl. Billy Whedden of Sumter, S. C., would like to tell him a thing or two in ungentle language. Whedden examines his sore-feet during training maneuvers in Austria with the 349th Infantry regiment.

THEY'RE GAME — The grand opening occasion here is to celebrate the addition of another pachinko parlor in Tokyo. It's a pin-ball game that's popular.

'THE SHREW'

Katie tries for a field goal, but no luck.

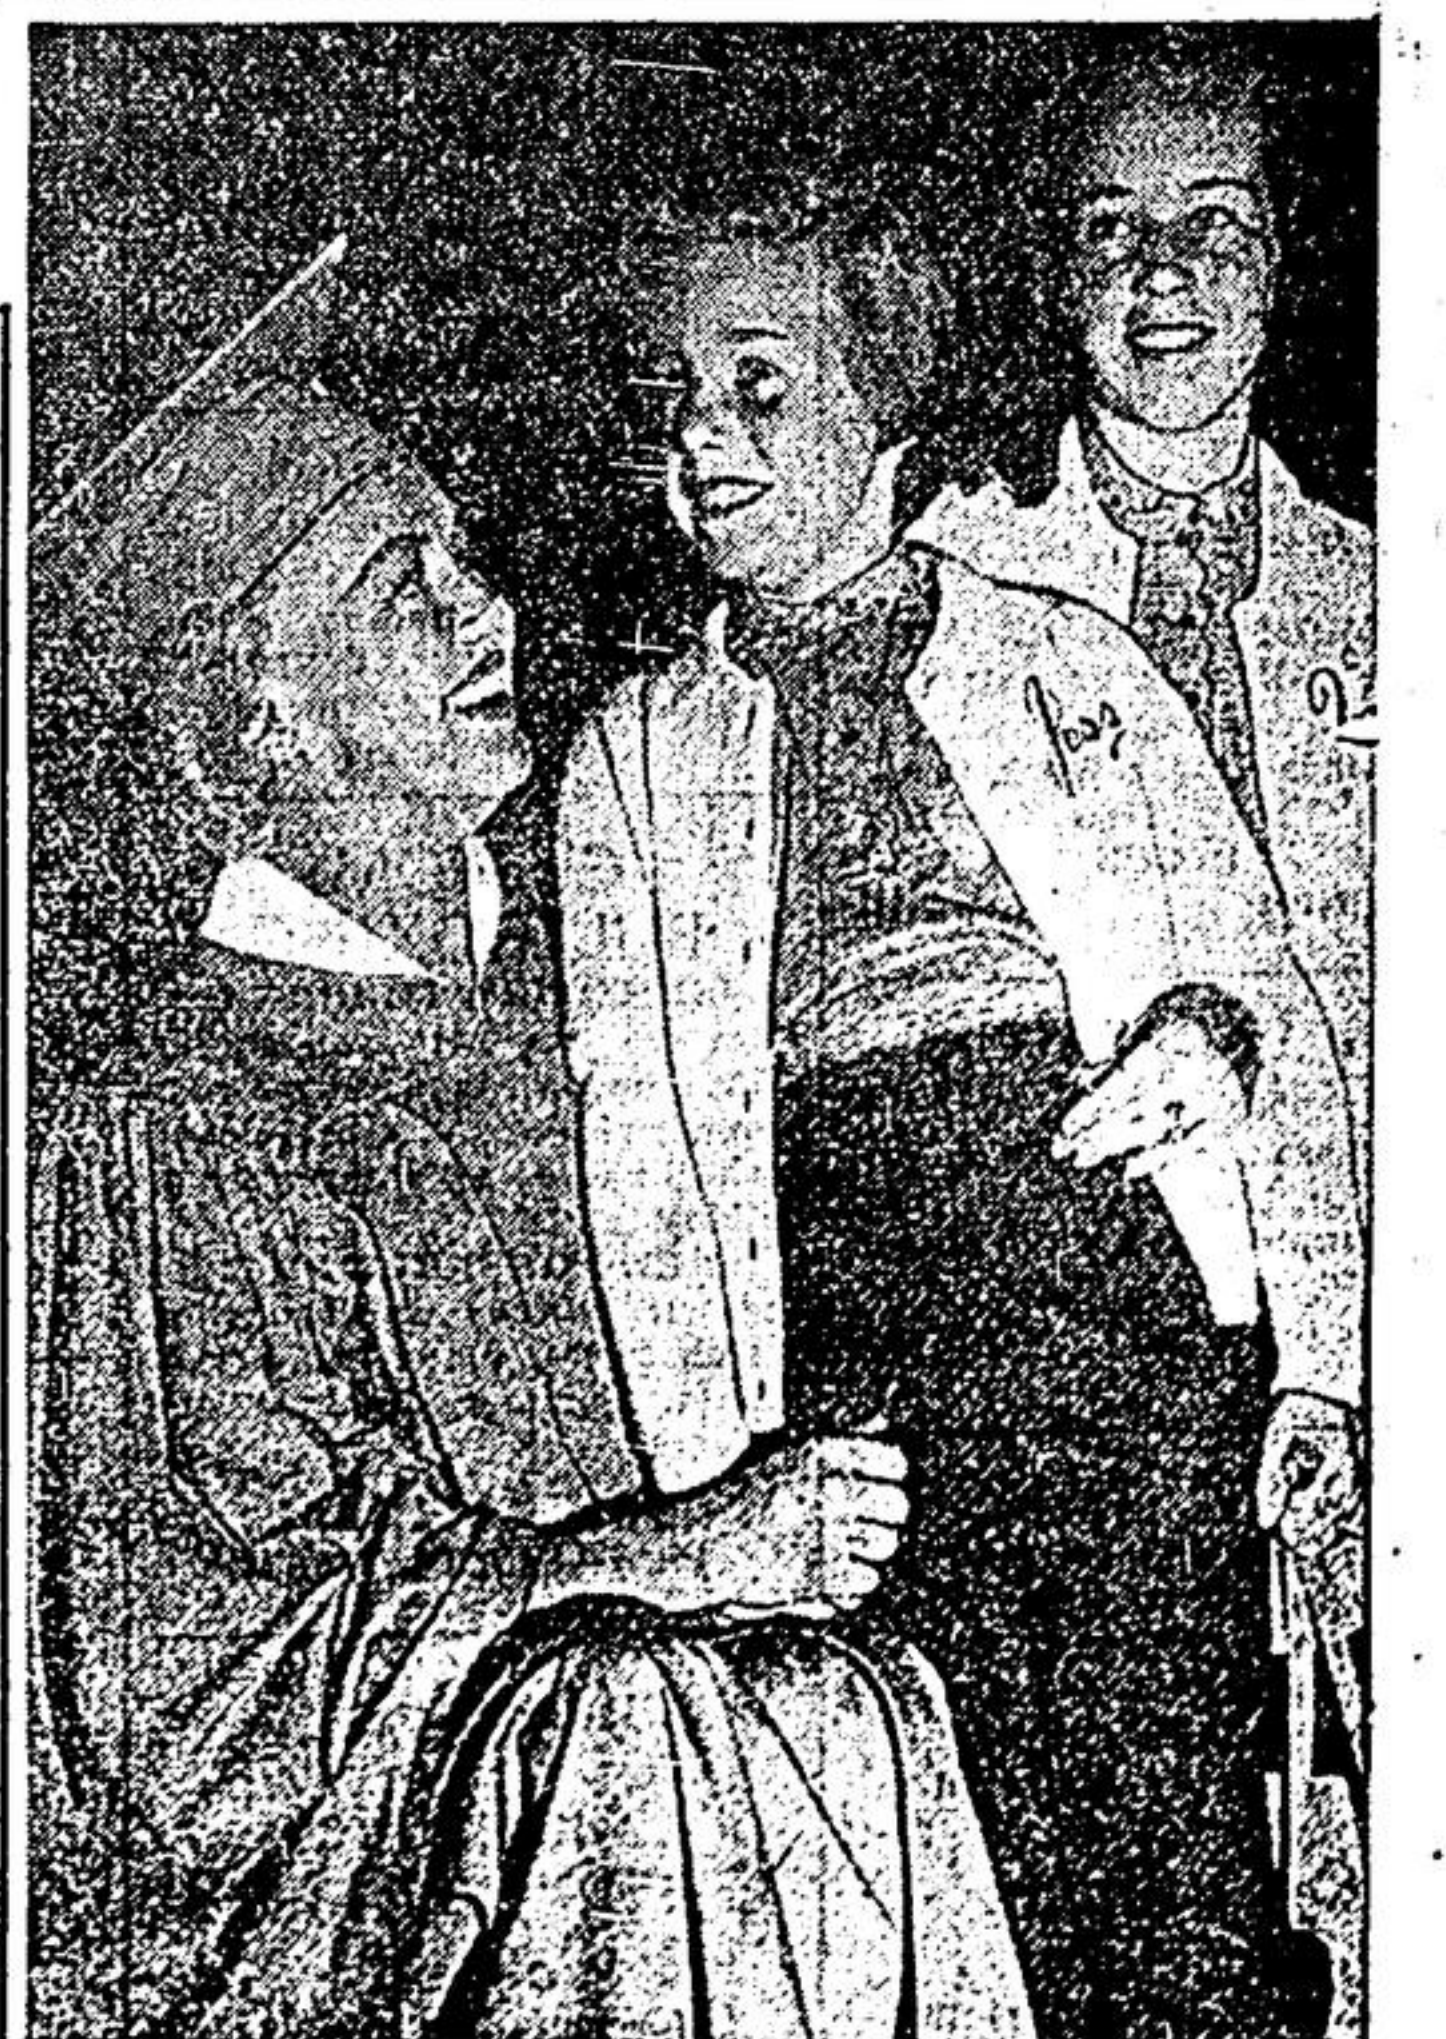

Just who is supposed to be doing the taming in this "bit"?

They're both looking forward to a tour of Australia later.

WHEN William Shakespeare wrote "The Taming of the Shrew," he didn't envision Katharine Hepburn in the title role, but she is as shrewish as any actress can get. If anyone doubts that, just ask Robert Helpmann, her costar, to show you his wounds. They're in London rehearsal.

OH, MOTHER!—Wearing college graduate's gown and mortarboard, g(l)amorous actress Betty Grable welcomes her daughters Jessica, 8 (center), and Vicki, 10, to the set of her latest musical. Costume is for the picture.
