CHEMISTS TRY FOR BETTER DOUGHNUTS

Chemists are searching with microscope and beaker for a secret new formula that will revolutionize an industry and bring new joy to mankind.

The goal: A doughnut just like grandma used to make.

Commercial bakers in the United States are turning out doughnuts at a rate of more than 7,500,000,000 a year. That's nearly 50 for every living human in the nation, according to the Doughnut Corporation of America.

The sinkers are tire-shaped (both balloon and bicycle), twisted, braided, rectangular or square. Some are plain. Others are flavored with chocolate, strawberries, cinnamon or jam and jelly.

But most are just doughnuts. Cooks and chemists, with the aid of physicians diagnosing a case, get together daily in the test kitchens, test tube-filled labs over downtown Manhattan's coffee shops, and hold consultations.

They poke freshly-made doughnuts and prod them, weigh them, give them bite and taste tests and even take their temperatures.

It is doubtful if some new and terrible nuclear weapon gets more scientific attention.

The diagnosis is that these modern sinkers are sunk by comparison with the old-fashioned kind that used to give grandpa such joy and indigestion. Digestible fried foods were scoffed at then.

The biggest problem with modern doughnuts is that they don't dunk the way grandma's doughnuts did.

That doesn't mean commercial doughnuts aren't as good as grandma's, a kitchen clinician said. It just means that they aren't like hers, and there are always people who want the old-fashioned kind.

Apparently grandma's same basic ingredients are used — flour, sugar, shortening, eggs and milk. But it is very difficult to make doughnuts like hers with modern automatic equipment.

So this problem is out of the deep fryer and into the burner fire, so to speak.

The perfect sinker must first of all be soft — but not too soft. And you have to have what the bakers call "symmetry and bloom." In rough translation that means smooth and puffy.

The doughnut really gets the once-over — weighed and measured to make sure it meets uniform doughnut standards. It also has to have "character" in its crust.

When the doughnut is broken for dunking does it crumble into the coffee or remain free and absorbent? Does it really look good enough to eat? If it does, the tester eats it. Or what is left of it. That's the final, crucial test: How does it taste?

Grandma most likely didn't even use a recipe for her mouth-watering concoction. She even cooked the little globs she cut out to make the holes in her doughnuts.

But with automation things are different, we guess.

Doughnuts are made from the very start with the holes built in.

Kitimat grows

Already Alcan's big new West Coast smelter goes ahead with TWO major increases to meet the rapid growth in demand for Canadian aluminum

The broken lines on the photograph roughly indicate the additional area to be occupied by new smelters and other buildings. Beyond the present plant (the aluminum structure in the middle ground) can be seen the harbor and docks of Kitimat.

In August, 1954, only 3½ years after ground was broken, the Kitimat smelter commenced production of aluminum with an annual capacity of 91,500 tons. Almost immediately a 60,000-ton extension was started. And in the spring of 1955 the decision was made to proceed with a flexible program to add a further 180,000 tons to ingot capacity.

... A progressive increase to 331,500 tons, more than three times the size of the original installation, and well on the way to our ultimate Kitimat goal of 550,000 tons a year.

"This continuing expansion of Kitimat in successive stages", stated Aluminium Limited president Nathanael V. Davis, "should, we believe, help to keep pace with the growing free world demand for aluminum and particularly the demand in our major export markets, the United Kingdom and the United States."

The new facilities will go into production step by step, with the first unit starting up in the fall of 1956. It is expected that the present building program will be completed in 1959.
