

New City to Rise on Site of Old Race Track

This artist's conception is drawn over an aerial photograph. It depicts Thorncliffe Park in 1962. $100 millions will be spent on development of the 388-acre plateau site. The view looks southwest to downtown Toronto, 4 miles away. Residents using the Don Valley Parkway, (left.) will enter it by the cloverleaf, (far left). Industrial acreage borders the C.P.R. mainline, right. Commercial buildings will occupy the foreground and far distance.

Average - rental, high - rise apartments will border the ravine edge with garden-type and multi-level apartments surrounding the shopping centre, community centre, schools and churches in the middle. A final phase of the giant project, called by its developers "one of the outstanding 'satellite' communities on the continent" will be a golf course and sports centre in the landscaped river valley. Construction begins this spring.

NEW ASSISTANT FOR LOCAL CORONER

Dr. R. B. Mitchell has recently been appointed Coroner in and for the County of York. Owing to the increase, both in the population and Coroner's duties, Dr. Mitchell will be associated with Dr. S. S. Ball, who has been the Coroner in this district for many years.

Dr. Mitchell is well known in the Village of Stouffville, having been in practice since 1953. His offices are over Hous-ton's Rexall Drug Store. He is associated with Dr. D. H. Smith.

Back from Mexico

And now for the "King of Sports" — Bullfighting! This sport is most active on Sunday and is the main interest of the people of Mexico. Mention "El Toro" to anyone down here and they know exactly what you mean. The stadium is very large and the average crowd in attendance is around fifty thousand. At the beginning the matadors walk calmly across the ring roughly a hundred and twenty-five feet across. They pay their respects to their own religion and are handed their bull-capes. Each matador is dressed to suit his own taste and many wear cloaks trimmed in real gold. One matador is left in the ring and the signal to release the bull is given. The bull may be one of two types, the slow sleepy kind or the type I saw, lively and dangerous. As the bull comes out, the matador usually gets down on one knee and faces it in this position for several seconds. This is done to show that the fighter respects the bull he is about to fight, and to show that he is at the mercy of the bull. The fight begins. With a few graceful sweeps the bull starts his march to death. To the cheers of the crowd and the rhythm of the bull's hoofs the matador lures him on. Later, to live things up, a very sharp spear is thrown into the hump on the bull's back. To this is attached several colored ribbons. This is done to enrage the beast and make him more dangerous. Several of these are thrown and by the time the game is well advanced, the matador has a very angry ton of death in front of him. When the animal is faltering and the matador thinks the time is right he plunges the sword into the back of the bull's neck and again, to the envy of the crowd the matador is conqueror in the Spanish sport of Kings!

Another much-discussed topic in Mexico is the pyramids, the oldest man-made structures in this country. Fifteen miles from Mexico City is a small colony of ancient and well preserved Mayan or Aztec buildings. The name of the original builders is not known, but it is an established fact that these pyramids are older than those of Egypt. There are two in this group. The largest has been excavated and rebuilt. There are at least one thousand steps up the front and the structure stands about one hundred and twenty feet high. From the top one can see miles and miles in every direction.

The second and smaller pyramid has not been excavated as yet and another fellow and I went over to the smaller one to which no path had yet been made. We searched around and found a few things of great interest which I brought back with me.

The largest of these pyramids is out on the Yucatan Peninsula. This I have not seen so cannot give a description of it. The smaller buildings and houses are almost completely covered with earth, but there are a few that are not. Some have paintings still visible on the walls.

The layout of the city was as follows: at the south-east corner was an extremely large square. To get into this there are about thirty steps to climb and thirty more to get down into the square. Around the sides stretch the walls and on top are several platforms used by leaders to make announcements from. At the far end of the square is what was once a temple of the sun-god or some other significance along that line.

In the square we were told, the merchants would bring their goods to sell or trade to other merchants or the public. There is a well in the square, that to this day is still holding water. On the west side of the city are found the two pyramids. Along the south side runs what appears to be a wide street with a waterway in the middle. On either side appear mounds which we believed to be houses. The north side was also made up of the pyramid and the square.

That was my visit to the ancient building side of the settlement. I also visited their government museum which held relics that were dug out in excavations. Gold was used as a decoration on nearly everything. There were many carvings and paintings shown here, and that was about the extent of the things they had in this building which wasn't very big. This completed my visit to pyramid city.

What To Do Where To Go This Sunday

Looking for an activity this Sunday? Well there are lots of exciting happenings every Sunday of the year in Toronto, if you just look around. And best of all, you can enjoy this un-hurried, uncrowded day in Toronto at very little expense. Take, for instance, window shopping in the BLOOR, BAY, YONGE STREET area. Here you'll find Toronto's smartest shops selling everything from antique furniture to Zulu masks. Incidentally, next week the big Easter Parade will be held along Bloor Street, and if you want a preview just stroll on down. You'll see all sorts of fabulous fashions in the shop windows, destined to be the big hits the following Easter Sunday.

But if culture is your meat, then the swing is to Toronto's justly famous ART GALLERY. Here you can see the entries from all the way across Canada in the 30th Annual Exhibition of the Canadian Society of Painters in Watercolours. Famous artists like William Winter and Sid Watson will have their work on display as well as many lesser known names. A panel of judges will select the best, so the work is sure to be of a very high order.

In another part of the Art Gallery you can see some of the wonderfully clever work done by the students of the Ontario College of Art. It has been selected from first to fourth year students and it is amazing the professional polish most of it has. You'll see every type of art including avant garde and classic treatments. A good deal of this exhibition is turned over to the crafts, such as sculpture, textile and metal work.

Also in the Art Gallery this Sunday, starting at 3 o'clock, you'll be able to hear the last of their Sunday concerts. This program will be made up of Easter music and will be performed by the Collegium Musicum under the direction of Udo Kasenets. The group was formed in 1954 and consists of twenty-two highly skilled musicians who are much praised for their playing of the lesser heard classics and contemporary works. Admission here, as with the Art Gallery in general, is free.

After you've finished your Sunday activity, plan on making it a perfect day with a perfect meal at friendly SCOTT'S RESTAURANT, on the south side of Bloor Street just two doors west of Yonge. The atmosphere and the food prepared by one of Canada's leading chefs, is such that you'll want to return again and again. Scott's famous French Buffet, or Steak Corral, offer you truly great foods at very reasonable prices. The French Buffet costs only $1.95 with as many helpings as you like! Take the children along. Scott's welcome family groups for dinner each Sunday between 4 and 9 p.m. Call WALNUT 2-4320 for a table reservation.

We hope you'll have a very pleasant Sunday, and next week we'll bring you more suggestions.
