LIFE IN GREENWOOD CAPTIVATES KIDS

Bows and arrows, caps of Lincoln green, jackets, vests, belts with money pouch (and money), toys of every description, masquerade costumes and play clothes patterned after the garb of our Medieval English forebears, all assure buyers in Toy Stores that Davy Crockett's replacement is here.

He's Robin Hood, brought back to life via TV's "The Adventures of Robin Hood" which bowed in last September, and is seen weekly over television. What this means to the toy and juvenile merchandise industries is a matter of many millions of dollars additional business this year.

That's what now hero-type merchandise can bring to the tills and that may be why manufacturers watched the early ratings of the show with a tenseness usually associated with soon-to-be fathers. Robin Hood, in the person of handsome Richard Green, was tailor-made to their specifications and he brought a whole new set of accoutrements with him.

Long bow in hand, quiver of arrows at his back, sharply different type of headgear (a "first" juvenile requirement), and completely new garb, he paraded a whole "line" that manufacturers could quickly translate to juvenile array and prepare to repeat the success story of Hopalong Cassidy, Space Cadet and the Congressman from Tennessee. Early success of the show, reinforced by continuously soaring Neilson ratings, was the tradition of Sherwood Forest, Robin Hood came through, and he brought something for everyone.

By-Christmas time there were bows and arrows under the trees replacing the 45's, Old Betsy's, and assorted interplanetary weapons. By January, librarians and teachers were gratified by the increased interest in Robin Hood literature and history.

For the householder there are metal waste baskets, trays and glasses. For the musically minded there are, at last, count, six recordings of the Robin Hood song, sheet music, and from Switzerland, proof that Robin Hood can do anything—even scale the Alps. Where Hannibal used elephants, Robin Hood makes it on wings of song. The famous theme music has made its way into the intricacies of the famous Swiss music boxes and musical toys.

It's not only Robin Hood's garb, but life in the greenwood that has captured the hearts of his followers. They'll be camping out under Robin Hood tents and carrying their vistles and gear in Robin Hood pouches and bags. As they sit around the campfires, they'll strum Robin Hood guitars, mandolins and ukeleles.

The stay-at-home can read of Robin Hood in the new series of adventure books patterned after the TV series, work jigsaw puzzles or play the fast selling Robin Hood game featuring the "magic windows."

From Nigeria

Rev. Wayne Brenneman
"Why do men worship idols of wood and stone?" is one of the questions which will be asked and answered by Rev. Wayne Brenneman during the missionary address at Gormley Church on Sunday at 10 a.m. and Bethesda at 12 noon. Rev. Brenneman has an unusual display of idols once worshipped by the Yoruba people with whom he and his wife worked for the past eight years.

During the Brenneman's past term of service in Nigeria, they have taught in both the Yoruba Bible School and Girl's School. While supervising the work of the United Missionary Church of Africa in the Share district, they have seen the number of baptized Christians more than double. Ten new churches and schools were built by the congregations of the district during that time.

Rev. Brenneman graduated from both Goshen High School and Goshen College before going to Nigeria in 1947. He has been active in the translation of literature and in writing articles for missionary publications. Don't miss these services.

"OLD-TIMERS" PRESENT DIFFICULT POLIO PROBLEM
Stating that the recent polio victim is a much easier rehabilitation problem than those who had their polio ten or more years ago, Mrs. Hazel Munro, Case Secretary for the Polio Foundation, explained that in setting up a program for the "old-timers", many factors are involved that are not present in the recent paralytic.

"Probably our most difficult type of case is that of the middle-aged polio paralytic who had learned to live with his handicap and was able to earn an income sufficient to take care of his family. However, his good muscles, overstrained because one muscle may have been doing the job of several damaged ones for years, finally breaks down and one or more limbs are out of action. Unless something is done, some of these "old-timers" can eventually even become permanent bed patients unable to perform any useful function," Mrs. Munro explained.

"We have several of these cases pending at the moment—one is a father of two—about 35 years of age, whose back muscles were weakened by polio. He worked at a bench, bending over his work. His back muscles finally gave out, and he must now support himself with his elbows as he works, which interferes with his capacity. He needs first a
