COYS ARE MY LINE

by Neil Patrick

Maybe you remember a few weeks ago I mentioned the law in Memphis, Tenn., against blowing car horns inside the city limits.

That was a good or a bad law, I suppose, depending on which end of the car horn you happened to be at. Since men first started to push themselves around in horseless carriages they've been passing laws about it, and some of them have been pretty foolish. In the years I've been around cars I've tucked away a few of the stranger ones.

We might have had cars almost 100 years sooner than we did, for instance, if it hadn't been for an English law passed around 1830. Steam coaches were operating in those days; one man had three of them on a regular route of more than 3000 miles near London. Another Englishman had nine steam buses on regular routes.

But then came the famous Red Flag law which required a man to walk in front of the coaches with a red flag in the daytime and a red lantern at night. The fare on the toll roads and bridges was raised and raised (even in those days horseless carriages were seen as a good source of revenue) and the first practical self-propelled vehicles were forced off the roads.

As a result, there was no advance in motor transportation until after 1896 when the silly, restrictive laws were repealed. Quite a difference from today when the buyer expects — and gets — some new advance in motoring every year.

The rapid advancement of automobile design and craftsmanship means, too, that a car a few years old still has lots of dependable miles, economical transportation and even luxury in it. In buying a used car you have even a wider range of choice than in buying a new car — and room to splurge on a little luxury too without busting your bankbook. Glad to show you how, the next time you drop around the lot.

The price tag tells only part of the story...
