human side of the Royal Family involve automobiles. Prince Philip likes to take the wheel of a racy sports car now and then, and, from that we get a picture of the spirited young man he is. In New Zealand one day he drove the Royal Tour car himself, with Elizabeth beside him. After all, every man likes to take his wife for a drive.

A lot of Canadian soldiers in England during the war got lifts from a kindly old lady in a big car, and discovered later they were riding with Queen Mary.

I always remember the two Canadians who were heading up to London from the boat train after the big Vimy reunion in France before the war. Their car, broke down (obviously wasn't' one from our lot) and they were picked up by a young man in a big Daimler.

They exchanged notes and found they were all heading for London; so the man'in the Daimler said "well, come on up and have a drink with me" - and before they knew it the big car was wheeling into Buckingham Palace. Their friend, they found, was the Duke of Gloucester, the third son of George V.

For the Royal Family, automobiles were a way to get out from under the restrictions of palace protocol. Like everybody else, they found that driving opens the way to many new adventures, new places to see and new people to meet along the way. And there's satisfaction in owning your own car. I've always thought, the satisfaction of controlling exactly where you're going, how far and how fast and when you're going to stop.

If you want to do this in a Daimler, don't see us, we haven't any. But for a wide range of used cars that any size of pocket-book can afford, drop around. Nothing like a car to give you that royal feeling.
