YOUR HEALTH

WATCH POSTURE IN CHILDREN

Attention to posture should begin in early childhood because then structural changes may set in which may later become permanent. Some children carry themselves well naturally, others can achieve proper body mechanics only through conscious effort. These children may be built on thin, scraggly lines, have ill health, or be tired or shy.

Good posture is not only a question of a handsome appearance, but also a question of health. The health of an individual is definitely affected by distortion of the spinal column with the resulting bad posture. The interference with the nervous system and other vital structures may cause widespread effects.

An important thing that plays a part on poor posture in children is the garters for long stockings fastened to the waist, which pulls the shoulders down and forward, since children want their clothing tight. Poor posture is frequently the result of falls or other slight injuries which cause slight displacement of spinal vertebrae. These cause the child to maintain the body in an abnormal posture.

Excellent results can be obtained in correcting poor posture in children. But only by professional people who specialize in the work—Chiropractors—the structural engineers of the body.
