

TO LEARN OR TEACH

Did the Russian hockey team come to Canada to learn or to teach? Although I was not one of the privileged 14,000 persons in attendance at the Gardens on Friday night it was plainly visible on my TV set that our professional clubs might take a few pointers from our Moscow visitors. As far as I'm concerned, the European rules adopted by both the Russian team and the Whitby club for the much-publicized exhibition tilt are, in many respects, the right rules. The absence of midice boarding, slashing and high-sticking was quite noticeable. This was a sharp contrast to the rough and rugged schmozzles that occur in many of our pro games. The sportsmanlike conduct of the Russ club both before and after the contest, left many critics open-mouthed and red-faced.

I do not intend to take anything away from the Whitby team. They put up an equally fine performance and will be excellent representatives for Canada at Oslo next spring.

LET'S ENFORCE IT We noted with interest one of the rules written into the regulations of the North York Minor Hockey League under Governor, Mr. Geo. Haskett of Newmarket. It reads: Players will be suspended for rough play, fighting and bad language.

Whether this is a new rule in minor hockey. I'm not sure, but if it is, I'm for it. If it has been a rule in previous years, then I would say that it should be more strictly enforced. We must admit that it may be difficult to enforce such a ruling when it comes to the terminology of rough play but it certainly doesn't take any modern-day Einstein to rule on fighting or bad language. A one- or two-game suspension for such occurrences, especially at playoff time, would rapidly break the offenders of such habits.

MUST CALL A HALT

Following this week's issue, letters describing conditions in the local arena will not be accepted. Instead, readers wishing to comment on the subject are encouraged to pass their articles elong to either the rink manager or directors.
