STOP: TAKE ANOTHER LOOK AT FLUORIDATION

It is hard to believe that professional men who are classed as experts should support a program that is designed to find a lucrative market for a poisonous waste-product of industry, to the detriment of all who take it. There are several angles to this question which must be considered, and several other questions which arise from it.

The question is: What is the basic fundamental cause of tooth decay? This question is seldom broached.

The answer is malnutrition and wrong dietary habits. Chemical fertilization of land is one of the main causes of mineral and nutritional deficiencies in our food today, to which of course the experts do not agree.

Not only fluorides, but other minerals such as calcium, phosphorus and magnesium, which are equally essential for sound tooth nourishment, are largely lacking in today's diet. There are a few corners of the world which still exist free from the encroachment of modern civilization, where natural agriculture is practised and where disease, tooth decay and doctors, are practically unknown.

It is incredible, the emphasis which is placed on sodium fluoride as a means to combat tooth decay, while at the same time we condone the massive advertising campaign for the sale of soft drinks and denatured and artificial foods, which comprise a large percentage of our diet and which are also a major factor in tooth decay. These facts give rise to grave suspicions as to the real motive behind the campaign for the promotion of fluoridation of water.

There is no denying the fact that sodium fluoride is a violent poison, a chemical, and not a naturally occurring mineral. Fluorides are not present in vegetation or foods, in such a chemical combination as sodium fluoride, but in organic combination with other minerals which are readily assimilable and metabolized and which are not poisonous. Inorganic chemicals can not properly or safely be substituted for the natural. We are witnessing the failure of this practise in the increasing prevalence of disease.

According to scientific investigation over the past several years, sodium fluoride inactivates the vitamins in the body, interfering directly with the metabolic processes. It decreases the activity of the pancreatic enzyme secretion lipase by 50%. In such small concentrations as one part per five million. According to one authority, the proposed safe concentration of one part per million is equivalent to the toxic dose. There are many other harmful results of fluoridation too numerous to mention here.

Remember that sodium fluoride is not volatilized from water by boiling, so that the longer water is boiled, the more concentrated it becomes and the more dangerous to health. Think of the danger in restaurants where water is often kept boiling for long periods of time.

In a period of five years the water system may become corroded, as has already occurred in Concord, New Hampshire where 2.8 parts per million were found in an analysis of a sample of the water and proved to have come from the accumulated deposits.

Some Other Facts Should Be Known

Sweden and Switzerland have rejected fluoridation. Over 2,000 (two thousand) American communities have rejected it, and 75 other cities in the U.S.A., after having put fluorides in their water supply have stopped it after the facts have become known.

Three dentists in New York conducted an experiment on a large number of school children with tooth decay. They were fed three tablets per day of bone meal each, for one year, which stopped the tooth decay. Bone meal is a product which contains naturally all the mineral elements for tooth and bone development and preservation with no harmful after-effects. Then why put poison in the water?

Everyone should think thoroughly over this very serious question of fluoridation of the water supply, both as to its harmful effects upon health and the assault upon your freedom.
