We get our coal from the CO-OP.
 For many years Ontario farmers have been pooling their coal purchases through co-operatives and central purchasing. This bargaining power enables Ontario Co-operatives to specify top quality coal at a reasonable price. You can be sure that coal you buy from your co-op will be fresh-mined and ready to give you the clean, steady heat you want.

Reasons For The First Offender
 What are some of the reasons why boys and girls make their first appearance before the officers of the law? Broken homes and lack of parental control and interest contribute to delinquency. It is true that overcrowded living conditions and unemployment are sometimes factors. But it is completely erroneous to conclude that it is only youngsters from "the other side of the tracks" who get into trouble. Juvenile delinquents come from every economic level.
 Each year our Dominion Bureau of Statistics, Health and Welfare Division, publishes a booklet with statistics on juvenile delinquency. The introduction begins thus: "Juvenile Delinquent, as defined in the Juvenile Delinquents' Act, means any child who violates any provision of the Criminal Code or any Dominion of Provincial statute or any by-law or ordinance of any municipality, or who is guilty of sexual immorality or any similar vice, or who is liable by reason of any other act to be committed to an industrial school or juvenile reformatory under the provision of any Dominion or Provincial statute."
 Many cases are heard informally and the great majority of those which go to court are looked after by a special court for juveniles. Boys and girls under 18 are tried in a juvenile court in British Columbia, Manitoba and Quebec. In Alberta boys under 16 and girls under 18 go to this court. In Ontario, Saskatchewan, P. E. I., Nova Scotia and Newfoundland this court tries adolescents under 18.
 Juvenile delinquency has a terrifying sound in parents' ears. When a child gets into serious trouble with the law, his folks are usually alarmed—and quite rightly so. But mothers and fathers can often learn a good deal from understanding judges, social workers and psychiatrists. Wise handling of a first offender in the great majority of cases, results in the youngster steering clear of delinquency in the future.
 Not long ago Judge Loren Stewart, in one of our largest juvenile courts, made a significant remark. A ten year-old lad was up in court and pleaded guilty to a charge of breaking into a gas station the previous night. He had been caught and his father said, angrily: "The kid's always getting into trouble!"
 The judge asked delay of a week to find out more about this youthful offender through the court's clinic. From long experience Judge Stewart pointed out. "Until we find out why the child did something, we can't be sure he won't do it again." In 1956 there were 926 children who had been found delinquent one or more times in previous years.
 "Why" is the query often on the lips of children. But parents lead such busy lives that they frequently seem to be almost completely unconcerned with what their offspring are doing. They seldom stop to wonder about his motives. But if they are to be really helpful to a child in trouble, they must try to discover the reason for his difficulties.
 Blaming, reproaching, nagging at a youngster are very poor approaches. Certainly, he must accept his share of responsibility for what he has done—but why did he do it? As parents, have you not a part of his guilt? In China in the old days, when a youth misbehaved, the elders in the village asked, "Who is his father?"
 Any situation can be a learning one! Together parents and child should find why he has refused to conform to the rules of the family, school, or the laws of the community. Then there is genuine hope that he will not make the same blunder twice.
 It is amusing to see adults with no children of their own, who expect perfection from youngsters. Honest parents who see in their own lives a blending of success and failure, can hearten their child when he is in trouble. They can stand by with their love and their faith in him and re-assure him.
 Dr. Glueck, penologist at Harvard University, once wisely pointed out that one of the surest cures of juvenile delinquency is a father who is just and loving. Children need to look to parents for moral guidance as well as affection. Are you helping your child in his standards of behavior? Does he know from your example the line between right and wrong?
