LET'S TALK CARS

Who Sets Used Car Prices?

Many motorists, about to trade in their used cars, wonder when the salesman quotes them an allowance figure. They fail to realize he is only quoting, not setting, the market price.

Starting out to estimate a trade-in deal, most dealers use one of the popular price guides for a general indication of wholesale or retail prices. These are figures obtained from auctions and sales reports across the country and represent an approximate average of values.

Isn't it plainly evident, then that the real used car price setter is the cautious used car shopper who looks long and hard before he lays out his hard earned money? What he is prepared to pay for a particular model in a given condition is that car's true market value.

Excepting a really top condition used car sold by a dealer with a reputation for quality, this true market price is a standard and uniform figure, common to all dealers.

It logically follows, because profit and loss economics is a hard master, that a dealer offering you more for your car than its true market value, MUST shortchange you somewhere else if he is to survive economically.

That is why a wise buyer buys only from a dealer whose reputation will stand investigation and whose customers testify to the value and satisfaction he delivers.
