

LET'S TALK CARS

The Incredible Piston Ring

You don't have to be very old to remember when the number one mechanical fault of used cars (and some new ones) was excessive oil consumption.

The fact that this complaint is seldom heard these days is due largely to the research and efficiency of several firms that produce precision piston rings for the auto makers. Their unsung accomplishments have virtually made the incredibly high efficiency of today's combustion engine possible.

The acceptable standard for rings was to get 600 miles per quart, after the break-in period, for 25,000 miles without engine scuffing or blow-by. Now that standard is 1500 to 2000 miles per quart for 50,000 to 100,000 miles in an engine in which pressures and temperatures and speeds have climbed enormously.

Approximately 320 million piston rings are made annually in the United States each year, of which half go into new cars and the remainder into used. Roughly 70 percent of used cars receive a "ring job" before they are scrapped.

It naturally follows that any engine component as critical as a piston ring requires the highest degree of mechanic skill in installation if the manufactured excellence is not to be wasted. Rings must be fitted to be light-tight around the cylinder, yet slide easily to leave a microscopic film of oil.

A "ring job" is no task for amateurs or do-it-yourself handymen. If your car needs rings, and its general worth justifies the job, take it to a franchised car dealer whose mechanics are equipped and trained to do the job.

Large Battery System Powers Dial Exchange

Power to operate the Stouffville telephone exchange will be supplied by banks of large storage batteries located in the new exchange building on West Lawn Crescent.

The batteries are necessary because all of the dial equipment operates on direct current. Instead of the commercially-supplied alternating current. The batteries are kept fully charged by means of special generators which convert the commercial power supplied into direct current. The generators automatically operate at the level required to replace the amount of power from the batteries which is being used at any moment to operate the dial system.

As the power to run the generators is obtained from a commercial source, any break in that supply would mean that they would be unable to operate. To overcome the possibility of an interruption in service from this cause, a diesel power plant is kept in a state of readiness to take over the job of supplying alternating current to the building.
