The test with the Audiometer detects hearing loss if any in each ear separately, and the findings are drawn to the attention of the student's parents, and the family doctor. Further information will be directed to determining the cause of the hearing loss and may involve examination by an Otologist or hearing specialist.

A great deal of hearing loss in school children is due to minor causes, which when identified are easily treated by the family doctor. Some hearing loss is the result of more serious disease, and may require more prolonged treatment or adjustment of student activity. Occasionally use of a hearing aid is necessary to assist the student in the school work and possibly in other activities. Periodic testing in school is aimed at early detection, otherwise much hearing loss may go unnoticed, often for a long period. If a hearing defect re-mains unnoticed, the student may fall behind in his work and one problem leads to another. The longer it goes unnoticed the more serious the complications, therefore it is important that early detection be made to prevent difficulties in school and at home. Occasionally hearing loss is permanent and in these cases adjustment in the classroom seating plan, and other adjustments at school and at home can be readily made to assist the student where presents. dent where necessary. Food Poisoning Episode

Recently, more than half the guests at a wedding reception became acutely and violently ill a few hours after enjoying a dinner at a local restaurant. Investigation of the outbreak of food poisoning and examination of samples of the remaining food and specimens from the stricken guests, indicated that the cause appeared to be associated with the use of leftover turkey made into a creamed sauce. Some forty guests from the local area and additional guests who live outside the County became severely ill a few hours after dinner. Fortunately everyone recovered satisfactorily.

The wedding dinner took place on a Sunday following a Saturday wedding. Prompt and thorough investigation by health unit inspectors took place, and excellent co-operation from the stricken victims and the restaurant staff was obtained. Prompt examination of specimens at the Provincial laboratory in Toronto assisted in completion of the investiga-
