Dear Sir:

There has been a considerable amount written lately, not only in your paper but in numerous other papers about Canadian teenagers not knowing anything about their country.

Why, I ask, don't we know more about Canada? We do not because we haven't been given the chance in our schools is one reason.

If Canadian history was presented with a bit of colour and some Canadian history made compulsory each year in school then maybe we would know who Mr. Vanier is. I think we should be taught the workings of not only federal or provincial governments but of town and municipal ones as well.

It seems that the only ball the Boards of Education are on is a four sided one which is not caring. By the way, it does not happen to be teenagers who are running the education system, but some day, we will be in full control and it is only now that we can learn about Canada and if proper facilities are not provided then, I ask, who is to blame.

Why does Canadian history have to be presented in such a drab way, compared to other countries? Why can't it be presented as a fascinating eulogy of a struggle to win for us what we have today or what do we have today?

It is the senior students of today sitting in your high school classrooms struggling with French, Algebra and Chemistry who will be running this country in a very few years. Will we make the situation worse, (impossible!) or will we improve this mess you have handed us with a sigh of relief?

Sure, teenagers are inexperienced but whose sons and daughters are we? I think that it's about time, that adults stopped blaming the teenagers for everything and started pointing the accusing finger at themselves.

Isn't Ringo Starr our new Prime Minister? Why, I thought he was elected in the general election a few months ago. He won with his NEW party, didn't he?

Thanking you for your time, I'm one of those horrible, dumb teenagers—product of the generation now in control of a place called CANADA.

Lorne Thompson.

The total death toll of Canadians from cancer last year was 24,519. Of these victims 13,748 were men; 11,043 were women. Almost 400 victims were children under 10, half of them victims of leukemia.
