

When your sows talk, it's time to listen...

because they'll tell you the best way to get bigger, strong litters

Well conditioned sows give you more live, healthy pigs at farrowing time. In tests at Purina Research Farm, we found that an extra 25 lbs. of dry sow condition meant 1 extra pig per litter.

Purina Sow Chow mixed with your own grain, helps build body condition in sows and gilts so you get those extra profit-making pigs. For those important few days at farrowing time, feed Purina D & F Chow, a cooling laxative ration designed to help keep your sows healthy and on feed, while the pigs get off to a good start.

Try feeding your sows on the Purina Program. Let the results show you how it pays off in strong healthy litters.

Too Much Haste Shown In Purchase Of Meat Packing Plant - Lawyer

Members of a farmers' co-operative were "extremely restless" last summer and this fact partially explains why the co-operative was hasty in buying a meat-packing plant, a lawyer testified at Milton last week.

C. M. McKeown said he warned the co-operative about the great speed with which the deal was closed.

Farmers' Allied Meat Enterprises Co-operative Ltd. made a $1,500,000 down payment to buy the share capital of F. W. Feorman Co. of Burlington last Aug. 31.

The co-operative failed to make a final payment of $1,000,000 due last Nov. 30. The previous owner, Ernest R. Gunner of London, England repossessed the shares and has been attempting to sell the firm again to get the money owing to him.

A Royal Commission inquiry into FAME opened this week. Mr. McKeown's law firm, Wardlaw and Whittaker, represented FAME in the purchase.

In Four Weeks The negotiations were carried out in a four-week period last summer. FAME had been in operation four years, had raised about $2,000,000 capital from its 13,000 farmer members and had not started construction on any of its planned seven packing plants.

Asked why the delay was handled in such haste, Mr. McKeown replied: "They (the FAME directors) understood Mr. Gunner had other interested purchasers waiting in the wings."

He also said their own members were extremely restless as to whether they were going to acquire a plant, build a plant or move forward with a program.

R. F. Wilson, counsel for FAME in the inquiry, questioned Mr. McKeown about the fact his firm did not advise the co-operative's directors about the wisdom of the proposed purchase.

One point he questioned was failure to advise the client about the danger of the co-operative's position in going into the purchase without sufficient capital.

Seemed Intent Mr. McKeown replied that the directors appeared enthusiastic and determined to go forward with the deal.

Mr. Wilson said: "I take it that a client's enthusiasm, has no relation to the discharge of a solicitor's duties."

Barry Pepper, counsel for the law firm at the inquiry, argued that a lawyer representing an individual in purchase of a house tells him how much it will cost.

Gunner involved pledging of all the shares as security. "There is no doubt about that," Mr. McKeown replied.

The commissioner, Mr. Justice Campbell Grant, commented that a motion by the directors' building committee raises doubt. This resolution spoke of securing the loan with $1,000,000 in preferred shares.

MILK PRICE LEVEL CONCERNS DAIRY INDUSTRY

(A. A. Wall, Agricultural Representative, York County) Milk producers are doing a lot of thinking these days about the possible results of the recent Ontario Milk Enquiry. Things have been quiet for the last year or so but once again, milk marketing is the number one topic of conversation.

Most of the interest from producers is in pooling. There is very little neutral opinion. Those with poor quotas and who are being paid on a low percentage of their quota, see in pooling some hope of more equality with other producers.

Equal prices for all fluid producers is a very worthwhile goal. Generally, other farm products bring the same prices for all farmers, regardless of location or volume. It's a very difficult problem to correct though, once the pattern of inequality has been established. Those who stand to lose would be unusual human beings indeed, if they accepted a cut gracefully in the interests of equality.

I am even more concerned however, with the general price level and health of the industry. The tone of the report seems to say that the door to the milk business should be opened up. Early disappearance of all protective arrangements are the words used. This would take the lid off all the present milk controls.

If this were done, I would expect a quick and substantial increase in fluid milk being put on the market. Since the market will only take so much, something would have to be done to discourage production. In an open market, this something would be dropping the price right across the board.

I'll admit that the present artificial controls on production haven't worked very well. They are a real stumbling block to an energetic producer who wants to get ahead. And they have resulted many times in the inequality mentioned above. Still, I think a serious price break would in the long run, be worse.

If fluid milk prices settled at levels comparable to present prices for eggs, broilers, beef or lamb, the whole economy would be upset. The 100 to 150-acre farms in York County would be the first to suffer. The need for changing to larger and larger units, probably under corporate ownership, would be necessary for survival.

Even with fewer larger units, the dairy industry would be no better off, as long as production costs remain where they are.

Milk is a unique product. It's perishability, its pattern of production and its long term high investment aspect justify real effort to improve existing controls, rather than tearing down the fences and taking a very high risk of chaos.

CHIROPRACTIC VIEWPOINT:

Green Thumbs & Aching Backs

Without a doubt, the great Canadian hobby of planting seed and wondering what will come up between the weeds has "doubled up" more people in one season than the post-war housing shortage.

Gardening does afford healthful, unfatiguing exercise if the gardener knows what his joints are for and uses them in the proper manner. Otherwise the bending, twisting and pulling involved can make big men weep from woe and supple young housewives pull themselves painfully about like arthritic octogenarians. Some novices are lucky to escape with nothing more than an aching back, a stiff neck, or muscle kinks in their arms and legs. Not unusual is the onset of chronic disorders resulting from vertebrae being pulled out of normal relationship in the spinal column, causing much pain and distress, and increasing the chance that you will suffer a more serious disorder later on.

An early Chiropractic examination of such conditions will ensure your chances of enjoying the fruits of harvest come autumn.
