No Proof Horse Caused Pain

George Hill, charged with causing unnecessary pain to an animal, was acquitted Tuesday, when the actual pain could not be proven.

Hill was charged in the Township of Markham on August 25th, after he performed an operation on a pony owned by Lesres Borovoy of Toronto.

A veterinarian from Thornhill, Dr. Ralph Watt, explained to the court although the animal had lost a considerable amount of blood, it was not in any pain. He added, however, that the horse would be suffering and quite uncomfortable. Dr. Watt said that the operation could be performed without as much loss of blood, and without any hemorrhage.

Magistrate Russell Pearce said that he agreed with the defense that no pain could be shown, and dismissed the charge.

Borovoy, also charged as the owner allowing the operation, had his charges withdrawn.
