A SO-CALLED FRIEND

DEAR DORIS — I know I am too young to be in love (17) but I am very crazy over a certain boy.

I have a friend 16 who can get mostly any boy she wants. The first time she ever saw me with this boy she said, "Wow, he's cute! You want to keep a hold of him!"

My so-called friend is not the least bit shy, and soon got around my guy. I think she has stolen him away from me and I am so shy I don't know how to get him back. My friend is cuter than me.

Please help me.
Me or Her?

DEAR ME — So-called friend is right. A true pal would no more steal your boy friend than she would steal your watch.

What's more, any boy worth having soon gets over thinking of cuteness as the last word. Friendliness, consideration for others, a certain ladylike quality — these are the ways that win out in the end. Nuff said?

DEAR DORIS — I have been asked to be a bridesmaid for my brother's bride. I feel I am being used, since she is asking me in terms of politeness. We don't have a thing in common and we never speak unless its absolutely necessary.

My brother is having one best man. Would it be very rude if I declined the "invitation"? I know it's an honor. But we don't appreciate each other's company.

Undecided
DEAR UNDECIDED—Extremely rude. And short-sighted.

Do yourself a favor and start right now to establish good relations with this new member of your family. It was gracious of her to so honor you. Look for her good points and be helpful and gracious in return. Remember, "To know all is to forgive all."
