Versatile Mother Of Seven Works With Parolees

By MOLLIE STEWART
BOX GROVE — Versatility might be the best word with which to describe the many talents of Mrs. Emily Gray of Box Grove.

Apart from being a mother of seven, Mrs. Gray is also a short story writer, a poetess, song composer, church teacher, children's group leader, natural psychologist, and last, but not least, a first rate cook.

In between raising her large family, two of whom have since graduated from business college and three from Teachers College, the robust, lively mother has managed to fit in a schedule which would probably land most women into a hospital bed from sheer exhaustion.

With brown eyes twinkling, her arms around John, 10, and Alice, 17, who still remain at home, she attributed her ago-goneness to a deep abiding love of children.

"All my life I have liked to work with kids," she said. "Teaching handicrafts, in church, with singing groups and just being around when the kids need me," she went on.

WORK WITH PAROLEES
For fifteen years Mrs. Gray held Evangelical church service for young people in her own home. The reason was from necessity. Many kids could not get into town to a church due to transportation problems.

In recent years, with most of her own children grown and left home, she has branched into work with boys out on parole from the Cobourg Training School. The age range of the parolees are from eleven to sixteen.

This year she assumed the formidable job of being cook at the training school's summer camp located near Minden.

"There is a real need for understanding with these kids. If you show them you really love them their response is tremendous," she said.

Mrs. Gray claims that 90% of the delinquent cases she has come into contact with were from poverty stricken or broken homes, or homes where alcoholism existed or the parents were negligent or just indifferent.

"Love," she said, "is the greatest therapy of all. Nobody is so bad there isn't some good in them."

CREATIVENESS
In her odd moments Mrs. Gray writes short stories which she reads to her children's groups. She has also composed songs and hymns which have been sung by children in homes for the aged. Recently a poem was published in Junior Red Cross magazine.

Pity the man so obsessed by ambition that he seeks friendship only with those who can further his aims.

Cenotaph For New Library Site

MARKHAM — Rebecca Sissler, accomplished sculptress, formerly of Unionville, will design and construct a cenotaph on the site of the new Centennial Library, Main St., in Markham.

The plan was finalized last week at a joint meeting in Markham of the Centotaph Committee and the Library Board. Miss Sissler now resides at Terra Cotta, near Georgetown. Her work has received wide acclaim.

The monument, to be carved out of Italian marble, will depict a theme of family life with the home as the focal point of unity between parent and child.

Miss Sissler will begin work on the project immediately so that it may be completed by November 11, 1967.

The exact location of the cenotaph will be finalized by the two boards working in close co-operation with the building's architect.

Mrs. Emily Gray of Box Grove.
