When An Island Is Your Home

For a few days last week, Robert Collins of Ballantrae must have had a strange feeling of living on an island. The front portion of his property was completely flooded. Then suddenly over-night, the water was gone.

Lake Residents Protest 'Slum' Reputation

LAKE WILCOX — Acting as spokesman for 44 residents of Lake Wilcox, Mrs. Sylvia Heavener has taken exception to constant adverse publicity given that area in the Toronto dailies.

"Whenever the name of this community appears in print it seems to be in connection with slums," Mrs. Heavener said, taking strong exception to being tagged as residents of a "rural slum" and "shack dwellers."

"Lake Wilcox is a community with more than its share of cottage-type dwellings—slums if you must," she admits, but continues, "although many have been renovated to provide comfortable accommodation and are well kept. Lake Wilcox also has its newer homes owned or rented by average people with average incomes."

"The impression people have been given of Lake Wilcox (all of it) is one of trash-strewn lawns, garbage-piled backyards, dirt, drunkenness and squalor. This is what they believe because this is what they have read," Mrs. Heavener noted, pointing out that from time to time corroborating photographs have accompanied the stories on the area.

With this in mind, she offered evidence of other modern, well-built and well-kept Lake Wilcox homes. The adverse publicity has affected real estate values in the area, she claims.

Mrs. Heavener notes that they enjoy living at the lake. "We have fine neighbors, a large lot and plenty of space and fresh air. There is skating on the pond and skiing and tobogganing on the hills in winter, all at our back door. There is swimming and tramping the woods in summer."

"We watch the cows lazing in the fields from our window and one dawn saw a buck and doe grazing our garden. Yet a 20-minute drive takes us to the city."

Mrs. Heavener concluded her protest with a strong tribute to the people of Lake Wilcox. "Lake Wilcox is a community with perhaps more than its share of problems, but in that community live many decent people in well-kept homes—people of high morals who pay their bills, paint their houses, cut their lawns, trim their hedges and tend their garden—people who are trying to bring their children up to be worthwhile citizens of tomorrow."
