

Farmers Break Sabbath To Harvest Grain Crop

By JEAN LEAF
BUTTONVILLE — Harvesting is difficult for farmers this green August. Combines are in the wheat fields and the grain is plump, but in some cases the moisture content is higher than the percent admitted for acceptance at milling companies. Also, due to the lateness of the season, weeds have grown up with the grain. Fanning mills at local elevators are busy day and night; some have broken down; and farmers sometimes sit for hours with their truckloads, waiting for the grain to be processed. On the last fine Sunday or two, farmers who have never before broken the Sabbath have been forced to take advantage of fine weather to save crops and equipment.
