HOW TO LIVE THROUGH THE LONG HOT SUMMER

It is always a shock to read the accident rates on our "super" highways, the one-way four-lane kind with a boulevard down the middle. Thousands of us will be using these turnpike roads this summer on vacation. Now is a good time to mention a few reasons smash-ups occur on these roads engineers once thought of as accident-proof. Trouble develops when ordinarily cautious drivers become lulled into drowsiness. Higher speed limits tend to be exceeded. The driver's alertness, instead of increasing with the speed, DECREASES. A driver following too close at 60 m.p.h. needs 120 feet to stop (double what he needs at 40). Sudden slow down of the car ahead has often caused four or more cars to pile up in rear-end smashes. Best bet is to stay 20 feet (one car length) behind for every ten miles of speed. Stay in line unless it's absolutely necessary to pass. Then watch the "Blind spot" on your left in case another car is trying to pass YOU. When you have passed, be sure you can see the car you've passed in your rear-view mirror before you cut back in line. A couple of more precautions: If you're tired, pull over and take a nap; if you don't feel well, stop for a breather. If your car doesn't have good tires and brakes, better to stick to the side roads. This is doubly important today when all roads are jammed tighter than ever with cars.
