NEW CITY TO CARRY OWN TAX LOAD

Industrial development to keep home taxes down

Establishment of the planned community of Century City should not result in additional taxes for the present residents of the area. Revenue Properties Ltd., developers of the project, are taking great care, according to Land Development Manager Roger Cunningham, to integrate the residential, commercial and industrial areas so that the homeowner in the new community and in the surrounding area will have as little a tax burden to bear as possible.

Mr. Cunningham said the plan is to provide a proper balance of industrial and commercial assessment in the project in order that taxes on residential properties in and around the new city will not be adversely affected by the development.

As Century City will be a model community starting from virtually nothing but the land, it will be located on, all the services and facilities that are part and parcel of any city are being planned for in the most minute detail.

Such matters as education, recreational and community facilities; local roads, the supply of water, hydro and gas; sewage disposal and storm drainage are all being studied carefully. Some of the preliminary details of these aspects have already been noted in previous issues of this newspaper.

As final recommendations on these matters are submitted by the consultants retained, Revenue Properties will be reporting to you in future editions of "Century City News".

Yorkwoods Village, a development of Revenue Properties Ltd., blends the rustic flavor with the ultra-modern convenience of townhouse living. The development is located in the Finch-Jane area of Metropolitan Toronto.

New concept in city living a proven success in U.S.

Century City, a new concept in urban living in Canada is a proven success in the United States, England and other European countries.

Recently a number of journalists and elected officials visited Columbia, Maryland on which Century City is modelled to a great degree. They were impressed with what they saw, particularly the blending of rural life with the advantages of living in an ultra modern city.

Some facts about new city

- The housing problem in Canada has been described as "desperate" by many competent authorities. It is particularly acute in Greater Toronto.
- The solution to this crisis is the creation of new cities which are sufficiently far from metropolitan areas to exist independently and yet close enough to enjoy big city advantages.
- Recreation and community living will play a vital part in the planning of Century City. In the City of Toronto there are only 3.4 acres of parkland per 1,000 people. Substantially more parkland will be provided in the new City which will make possible a wide variety of recreational pursuits including horseback riding and boating.
- Unlike subdivision developments Century City will offer residents their choice of several types of dwellings... single family homes, town houses and high rise apartments overlooking scenic ponds.
- Home seekers with an income from $5,000 up will qualify for home ownership. The total cost of the home would be from $15,000 to $18,000. This compares with a mandatory income of more than $10,000 and a total cost of almost $30,000 in Metropolitan Toronto.
- Wherever possible area merchants will be given prior right to locate in the shopping areas of the City.

He cited how a farmhouse of some antiquity might be restored to serve as a library or a handicraft center.

Other examples of how the heritage of the area might be preserved, Mr. Cunningham said, included using meaningful names such as well known citizens, past and present, for street names and the planting of trees identified as part of the landscape of Uxbridge township.

All in all, he said Century City would follow the pattern of the U.S. cities visited many times by his company.

Industrial sites will blend into the residential and commercial areas. Small shopping areas will be set up to serve five hundred families with an elementary school included in the area. It will be possible for most families to walk to school, work or to do their shopping. Traffic will be thus kept at a minimum.

Similar planned communities have sprung up in England, Germany and the Scandinavian countries.

One model community begun in England, in 1960, now has a population of more than 100,000. In this growing family of planned cities, of which Century City will soon be a part, there is unanimous consent that they are an unqualified success.
