

Claremont Conservation Area

New field training centre officially opens March 31

PICKERING TWP. Conservation education and the teaching of young people about the importance of the quality of the environment in their daily lives is becoming an increasingly vital topic.

A tangible example of its growing importance is reflected in the establishment of a third conservation field centre by the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Conservation Authority at Claremont.

The new in-residence field centre, located in the Claremont conservation area in Pickering Township, opens its doors to its first class of students on Tuesday morning, March 31.

The first class at the centre will be 36 grade 11 students from Toronto's Oakwood Collegiate Institute. They will be accompanied by Robert Putnam, head of the school's geography department, and Miss Marion Kalmuk, a teacher at the school.

The class will be welcomed to the centre by Mrs. Florence Gell and Elgin H. Card, of the Authority's executive committee. Both have been active in the development and establishment of the three field centres, which have been accomplished through financial assistance provided by the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Conservation Foundation, along with a 50 per cent grant from the Department of Energy and Resources Management.

The students and teachers will live at the field centre during the school week, and the students will take courses in conservation education as part of their curriculum.

The Claremont field centre will operate continuously on a weekly and weekend basis and has already been booked by schools and other conservation-oriented groups to the end of the year. Classes from Metro and regional schools will use the 400-acre Claremont area "classroom" for a week at a time.

During the summer months, the facility will be used to provide conservation courses and seminars to teachers and summer students offered by both the College of Education and the Ontario Department of Education in co-operation with the Authority.

The Claremont conservation field centre is, in effect, an east-end extension of the now-famous Albion Hills conservation field centre. The Cold Creek field centre is the other such facility to be developed by the Authority. Both Albion Hills and Claremont centres have in-residence facilities for accommodating 40 students and teachers.

Employee's suggestion worth $500

Michael Cadieux (left) of Stouffville, an employee of I.B.M., submitted a suggestion worth $500. Here, it is honored by the Chairman of the Board, Mr. Jack Brent, at a formal presentation ceremony. Michael is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Ted Cadieux, Main Street, East.
