From the minister's study

By V. G. Shillington, R.R. 3, Stouffville.

Rumor has it that someone has created life somewhere. Before you become overly excited about the idea, you should know that the particular form of life that men have made is not open for exhibition yet. Maybe some day, but not yet. When the news first reached our house, I must confess we were not inclined to throw a big party to celebrate the occasion. In fact, I slipped off to a quiet nook and thought about it for a while. The thought of it numbed my senses a bit. Finally, I emerged from my solitude, revived and ready to press on as before, only to be greeted by an egg head 'friend' who also heard about the creation of life. With a sly grin he inquired, "Well George, what does that do to your theology?"

I was glad that I had taken myself off to think about this new frontier in modern scientific research. My inquiring friend frowned a little when I replied, "Nothing, nothing at all. This new venture in science, if it has done anything at all to my theology, it has confirmed it." Since the critic was familiar only with a few of the fundamentals of the Christian theology, I seized the opportunity to fill a few of the gaps in his thinking. It was obvious that the reason for the excitement was that MAN had created a form of life. To this excitement I responded, "Well Bill, what does that do to your evolution?" O, that wasn't the subject. We were discussing creation, not evolution. Sorry Bill, these days when the subject of creation arises, it automatically introduces its counterblast, evolution.

Now, let's say it's true that man has succeeded in bringing about a form of life. Thus, man is a 'creator', imitating his own Creator at the beginning. Did you know that man bears the image of God? That is why man creates. Some people say it's time to write a new Bible with 'man at the centre'. The new Bible would have to open something like this: "In the end Man created a hell on earth." Frankly, I prefer to stay with the present Bible, which opens this way: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth."
