Vet-God bless

By Madeline Harrison.
LOCUST HILL - Some people have their blue Mondays. We have black Sundays. If anything goes wrong, it will go wrong on a Sunday.

Last week we had had a hard day - work, work, worry, worry! Rushing hither, thither. Last minute chores not done. Dirty dishes in the sink. No clean clothes for work. Husband mad! Wife in a snit! Column put off till Monday, and to top it all, we missed the deadline.

We had an uneventful week in Locust Hill until (you guessed it) - Sunday. Our very good neighbors to the south of us raised the alarm that one of our horses was acting peculiar. After a heart-in-the-mouth race to the field to check, we found out it was just the nutty stallion chasing his tail. Those of us who know him, expect him to pull tricks like this. This particular stallion doesn't have all his marbles - witness the many shows we have attended and scared both spectators and exhibitors half to death.

At home he's a pussy cat. At a show he's a raving lunatic. When he shows off he has bats in his belly. Just the same, we are pleased and proud to have such kind and concerned neighbors. That's why we like living in Locust Hill.

The other reason we are proud to be in the horse game, is our veterinarian. He has to put up with more weird phone calls at the most unearthy hours than any human being should have to stand. If it wasn't for our vet, we'd be patients in the nearest rest home.

Sunday night was a prime example. At supper time friend husband comes rushing in with the news that one of our little grey fillies was down with the colic. She is sick! Quick, the vet! At supper time, mind you, on a Sunday evening. Is there no rest for the wicked? If you happen to be a veterinarian - NO! A doctor can tell you to take two Aspirin and call back in the morning. A doctor hardly ever makes house calls - you have to crawl to the office. Not so with the vet. He makes barn calls in the morning, afternoon, evening and the dead of night.

When a horse or a cow has a tummy ache you don't stand around and discuss it, you run. Sometimes, what appears to be a simple malady, can end in death.
