NEWMARKET York Region's police commission has given Chief Bruce Crawford a $9.7 per cent pay raise to $19,500, retroactive to last Jan. 1. His two deputy chiefs, Wallace Harkness and Robert Hood, have been given 24 per cent raises to $31,000. The action was taken at a recent commission meeting which was closed to the public. Commissioner Ray Twiney said Thursday that all three senior officers had requested more money than they received. Mr. Twiney indicated he wasn't completely satisfied with the salaries, but "I didn't vote against them".

The only justification for Crawford's salary is that he's in line with Peel and what's likely going to happen in Durham, Mr. Twiney said. Some members of the board (police commission) feel Crawford is wonderful and all that he added. They feel York is the leader in regional police forces and that Crawford has more or less made it work and led the way in regional police forces. They feel he's as good as any chief around and he makes less than a deputy chief in Metropolitan Toronto.

Chief Crawford was paid $33,000 last year. The deputies each get $25,000. Mr. Twiney said the deputies were first given a $2,000 "adjustment" to their base pay, then got a $4,000 increase. In Peel Region, the chief makes $39,000, and the three deputies get $32,500, Mr. Twiney said. Except for Chief Administrative Officer Jack Rennie, who resigned last week, Chief Crawford is York Region's highest-paid employee.

Regional council has no direct control over police salaries. It allocates funds for the police budget, but cannot direct how those funds are apportioned. Mr. Twiney said the decision on senior officers' salaries was not made until recently because the commission wanted to wait to see final figures for other regions. He said another factor in the timing was a problem in getting all commission members together for a meeting.

Blood donor clinic Over 120 people gave blood July 29 at the blood donor clinic held at Stouffville Legion. Mrs. Walter Smith, local organizer, said that "it was pretty good for a summer clinic". The next clinic in Stouffville will be on Oct. 8.
