Some tips to help select toys

When you choose toys for your favorite children for Christmas, you're really selecting gifts that do more than amuse or entertain. Remember that toys influence young lives in both subtle and direct ways.

While children have fun playing with toys, they're also learning: aside from stimulating their curiosity and creativity, toys also help prepare them for their future roles in adult life by introducing them to the real world around them. So, put some careful thought into toy selection. Here are some guidelines:

Consider the child's interests, social involvement, as well as his physical capabilities. An audio-visual toy, such as the Snoopy Drive-In Theatre can encourage a child to be a good host by inviting friends to see special movies in his own little drive-in.

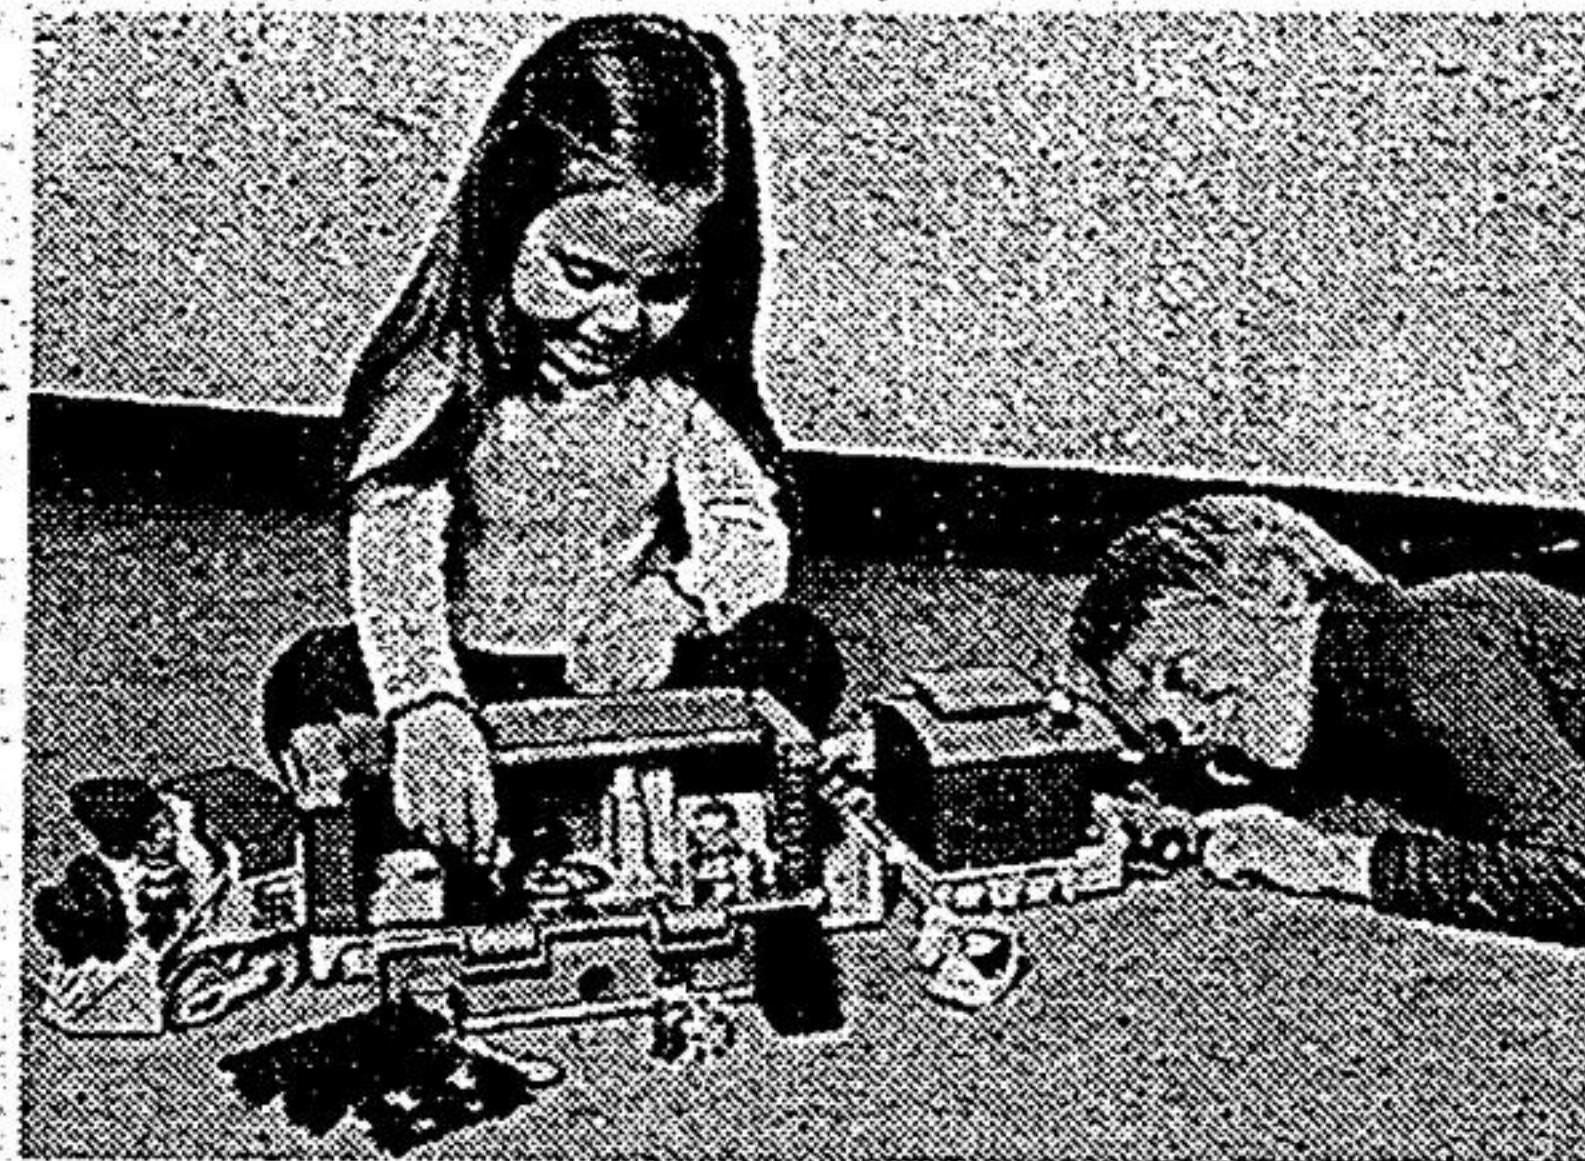

This toy has snap-in cassettes which children find easy to operate, backwards or forwards, without ever tangling the film. A dozen different great Snoopy stories are available to stir the child's imagination and teach him good moral values.

Consider the child's age. It's a good idea to check the recommended age range suggested by the manufacturer on the package, but know your own child's stage of development. For example, for preschoolers, the Talking Blocks, featuring stories from television's popular New Zoo Review, are excellent: the little ones merely push the block down in its holder to hear the story.

For children from age five and up, the SSP's and strict safety standards. So do pay attention when they do not recommend a toy for children under a certain age, and be sure your children use the toys as the manufacturers direct. Teach your children also to properly care for their toys and to put them safely away when playtime is over.

TTP's -- gleaming ultra-chrome racing cars made by Kenner Products -- would be more appropriate. With the streamlined racers, stunt cars and cycles, the older children can hold competitions of their own, learning how to win and lose with good sportsmanship.

Consider the toy's safety. You'll find that most American manufacturers adhere to

Lastly, don't make the common mistake of choosing toys that please you. Select toys that please the children and are meaningful to them.

BATTERY BLUES
Avoid disappointments on Christmas morning and stock up on batteries for those toys that require them and are not included in the packaging.
