

Winter fun at Bruce's Mill

Although a skilled cross-country skier can make the sport look ridiculously easy it can occasionally cause a few difficulties for the novice. This lady, who shall remain anonymous, came out second best in her encounter with a tree. — John Montgomery.

Lisa Merbs of Toronto is shown here cross-country skiing at Bruce's Mill Conservation Area. The prohibitive cost and dreadful lineups at ski resorts have helped make cross-country skiing an increasingly popular alternative to down-hill skiing. The local conservation areas are open for this purpose.

Metro expansion north only at York's request: McKeough

BARRIE — Any boundary north into York Region will come only at the request of the region,

Darcy McKeough, Ontario Treasurer and Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental affairs said here last week.

The minister's statements came during a press conference following a meeting between school board and municipal officials from York and three other counties and regions.

"We've made it clear that the boundaries stay the same," Mr. McKeough replied when asked about Metro expansion into York. He noted, however, that government policy can change.

The provincial official was asked if the Parkway Belt — a greenbelt utilities transportation and no-growth corridor along Highway 7

Durham officials see Barrie trip as 'joke'

BARRIE — A special trip here by Durham Region officials to meet with provincial representatives about spending guidelines has been termed a "joke" and "a total waste of time" by some of those attending.

Uxbridge Councillor Bill Ballinger said that it was "highly political meeting", with little opportunity to ask provincial officials specific questions.

A great deal of the attraction of cross-country skiing derives from the quiet enjoyment of the open countryside. This idyllic picture portrays a mood that is nearly impossible to capture with most other winter sport.

The several trails through Bruce's Mill offer several options and give people an opportunity to avoid contact with other people.

Former councillor appears

Local pit control his concern

UXBRIDGE — This township should retain control of deciding how and where gravel should be mined within its borders, council was told last week.

Former Uxbridge councillor Clark Muirhead said in a deputation that drafts of the regional official plan, as they now stand, would place the power over gravel mining in the hands of a regional body. He said the philosophy behind the draft plan is "If there's gravel there, mine it."

Mr. Muirhead added that because of their experience and closeness to the issues involved, council should fight to retain control over the gravel industry.

Councillor Bill Ballinger, a regional planning and development committee member disagreed, saying some of the measures governing the aggregate industry "might not even go through because they are too tough."

He said there was no sense in passing restrictive measures if they would only be overruled by the province.

Interest write off request

Board says charges stand

AURORA — Aurora's request to write off a $2,815 interest charge for late payment of its educational levy was rejected by the York Region public school board Monday night.

Since the town was assessed the interest as the result of delays in striking the 1975 mill rate, council argued the penalty for interest should be forgiven.

But Newmarket trustee Craig Cribar noted that only Markham and Aurora had failed to either pay on time or, when they did pay late, assumed the interest payment.

"If somebody paid it on time, somebody had it over the money to the board at specific times during the year, he said.

The school board must assume responsibility for the problem, said Aurora trustee Norm Weller.

"This board has created the problem because we were late," he noted.

The board's failure to act on the Aurora request could create difficulty in the future, he warned.

Mr. Weller said several municipalities are considering distributing special bills if the board levy is late.

The cost of the added billing and collection will be levied against the board, he said.

According to a poster put up by the organizers, "The Winter Nights Concert Series has been historically held the edge when it comes to education tax."

Under provincial legislation, municipalities collect education tax throughout the year but only turn over the money to the board at specific times during the year, he said.

While a homeowner is assessed a penalty for late payment of his educational taxes, the penalty is not turned over to the board, Mr. Chapman added.

"They get the advantage of tens of thousands of dollars as a result of the cash flow arrangement the law sets up," he explained.

The board approved maintaining its established policy and asking Aurora to meet the requested payment. Mr. Weller, Markham trustee Chris McMonagle, and East Gwillimbury trustee Joy Horton opposed the motion.
