Markham man fined

NEWMARKET - A Markham man trying to escape a confrontation with members of a motorcycle gang, found himself in Newmarket Provincial Court last week charged under the Highway Traffic Act with making an unsafe lane change.
Brian J. Hathaway was fined $20 after pleading guilty to the charge laid by York Regional Police last October the 9th, following an accident on Main St. N. in Markham.
Hathaway had been pursued by members of the gang following an altercation at a Markham Mall in which several members of the gang were involved. Though Hathaway was not involved personally in the fracas, he was driving home a friend who had been.
The court was told that the motorcyclists kept pursuing and overtaking his vehicle as he tried to drive along the road. Hathaway moved into another lane to try and get away from his tormenters and his vehicle caught the front wheel of one of the bikes causing an accident.
"Under the circumstances, if I could impose a suspended sentence I would," Judge Harris told the accused man. He explained that this would not be possible under the Act. The Provincial Judge fined Hathaway a minimum $20.

No decision on penalty for family deserters

NEWMARKET - Should those men who repeatedly disobey court orders requiring them to support their wives and children be thrown in jail and made public examples?
That was the question that split regional health and social services committee last week as it considered a request to endorse a resolution from Durham Region.
Provincial family court judges are unable to properly assess a man's failure to support his family because their decisions are based solely on presentation by the concerned parties, Durham argues.
Professional case workers should be hired to investigate cases of non-support and make recommendations to judges in such cases, the resolution says.
"And where men repeatedly fail to comply with orders of support, judges should throw them in jail as examples to the public, it concludes.
There are about 10,000 people in Ontario alone who are failing to comply with support orders, said regional social planner Alan Wells.
But although the committee recognized the need to do something about the problem, it could not agree with the idea that offenders should be thrown in jail.
"I don't believe someone should be nailed to the wall to serve as an example," said Councillor Ron Moran.
And apart from the question of non-support, the jailing of non-violent criminals is contrary to present judicial moves toward restitution rather than incarceration, he added.
Because the committee could not support that part of the Durham resolution, it simply received the resolution as information.

Learn to forgive

By LESLIE HOLBROOK
Some folks sure do hold a grudge.
"A little misunderstanding ten, twenty, thirty, forty years back will find stubborn people - so often relatives - still not speaking to each other."
Most younger folk find this either funny or sad - or incomprehensible. I agree with them: Why mar this too-short life - for no substantial reason - by an unforgiving attitude toward anyone, for some past slight, oversight or whatever?
Even if the original reason for the dispute was of significant proportions, isn't it past time to forgive and forget? The water is flowing all too swiftly under the bridge.
Anyone on your personal list?
If you and Great Aunt Martha or Cousin Ken are "not on speaking terms," make the first move and see what happens. No one ever choked from swallowing his pride.
In the light of life's real problems - and those of the world around us - that old squabble seems more than a little silly, doesn't it?
Dr. Cope W. Schwenger, Professor of Community Health, Faculty of Medicine, University of Toronto, tells me:
"All too many Canadians, including health professionals, are still under the mistaken impression that aging is a process only of decline and that old age can be summed up by such negative images as disability, institutionalization, dependence, loneliness and desolation."
These views, he emphasized, "are very one-sided, biased and often untrue. They do not reflect the actual situation."
Dr. Schwenger has an explanation for this lopsided look at us: He says it is based largely on the observations of social service personnel who are serving primarily the poor and the lonely, and of health workers treating the physically and mentally ill. These people do not come in contact with the vast majority of seniors.
