

The egg throwing contest turned out to be something of a sticky proposition. Paul Hillerup (left), and Andy Redshaw made valiant attempts to catch the fragile hen fruit.

These bed race contestants didn't let a little thing like a bent front wheel discourage them. After a rather rough encounter with the obstacle part of the course, huge logs that they rammed, the Gormley Gurns continued right on, wobbling all the way. —John Montgomery

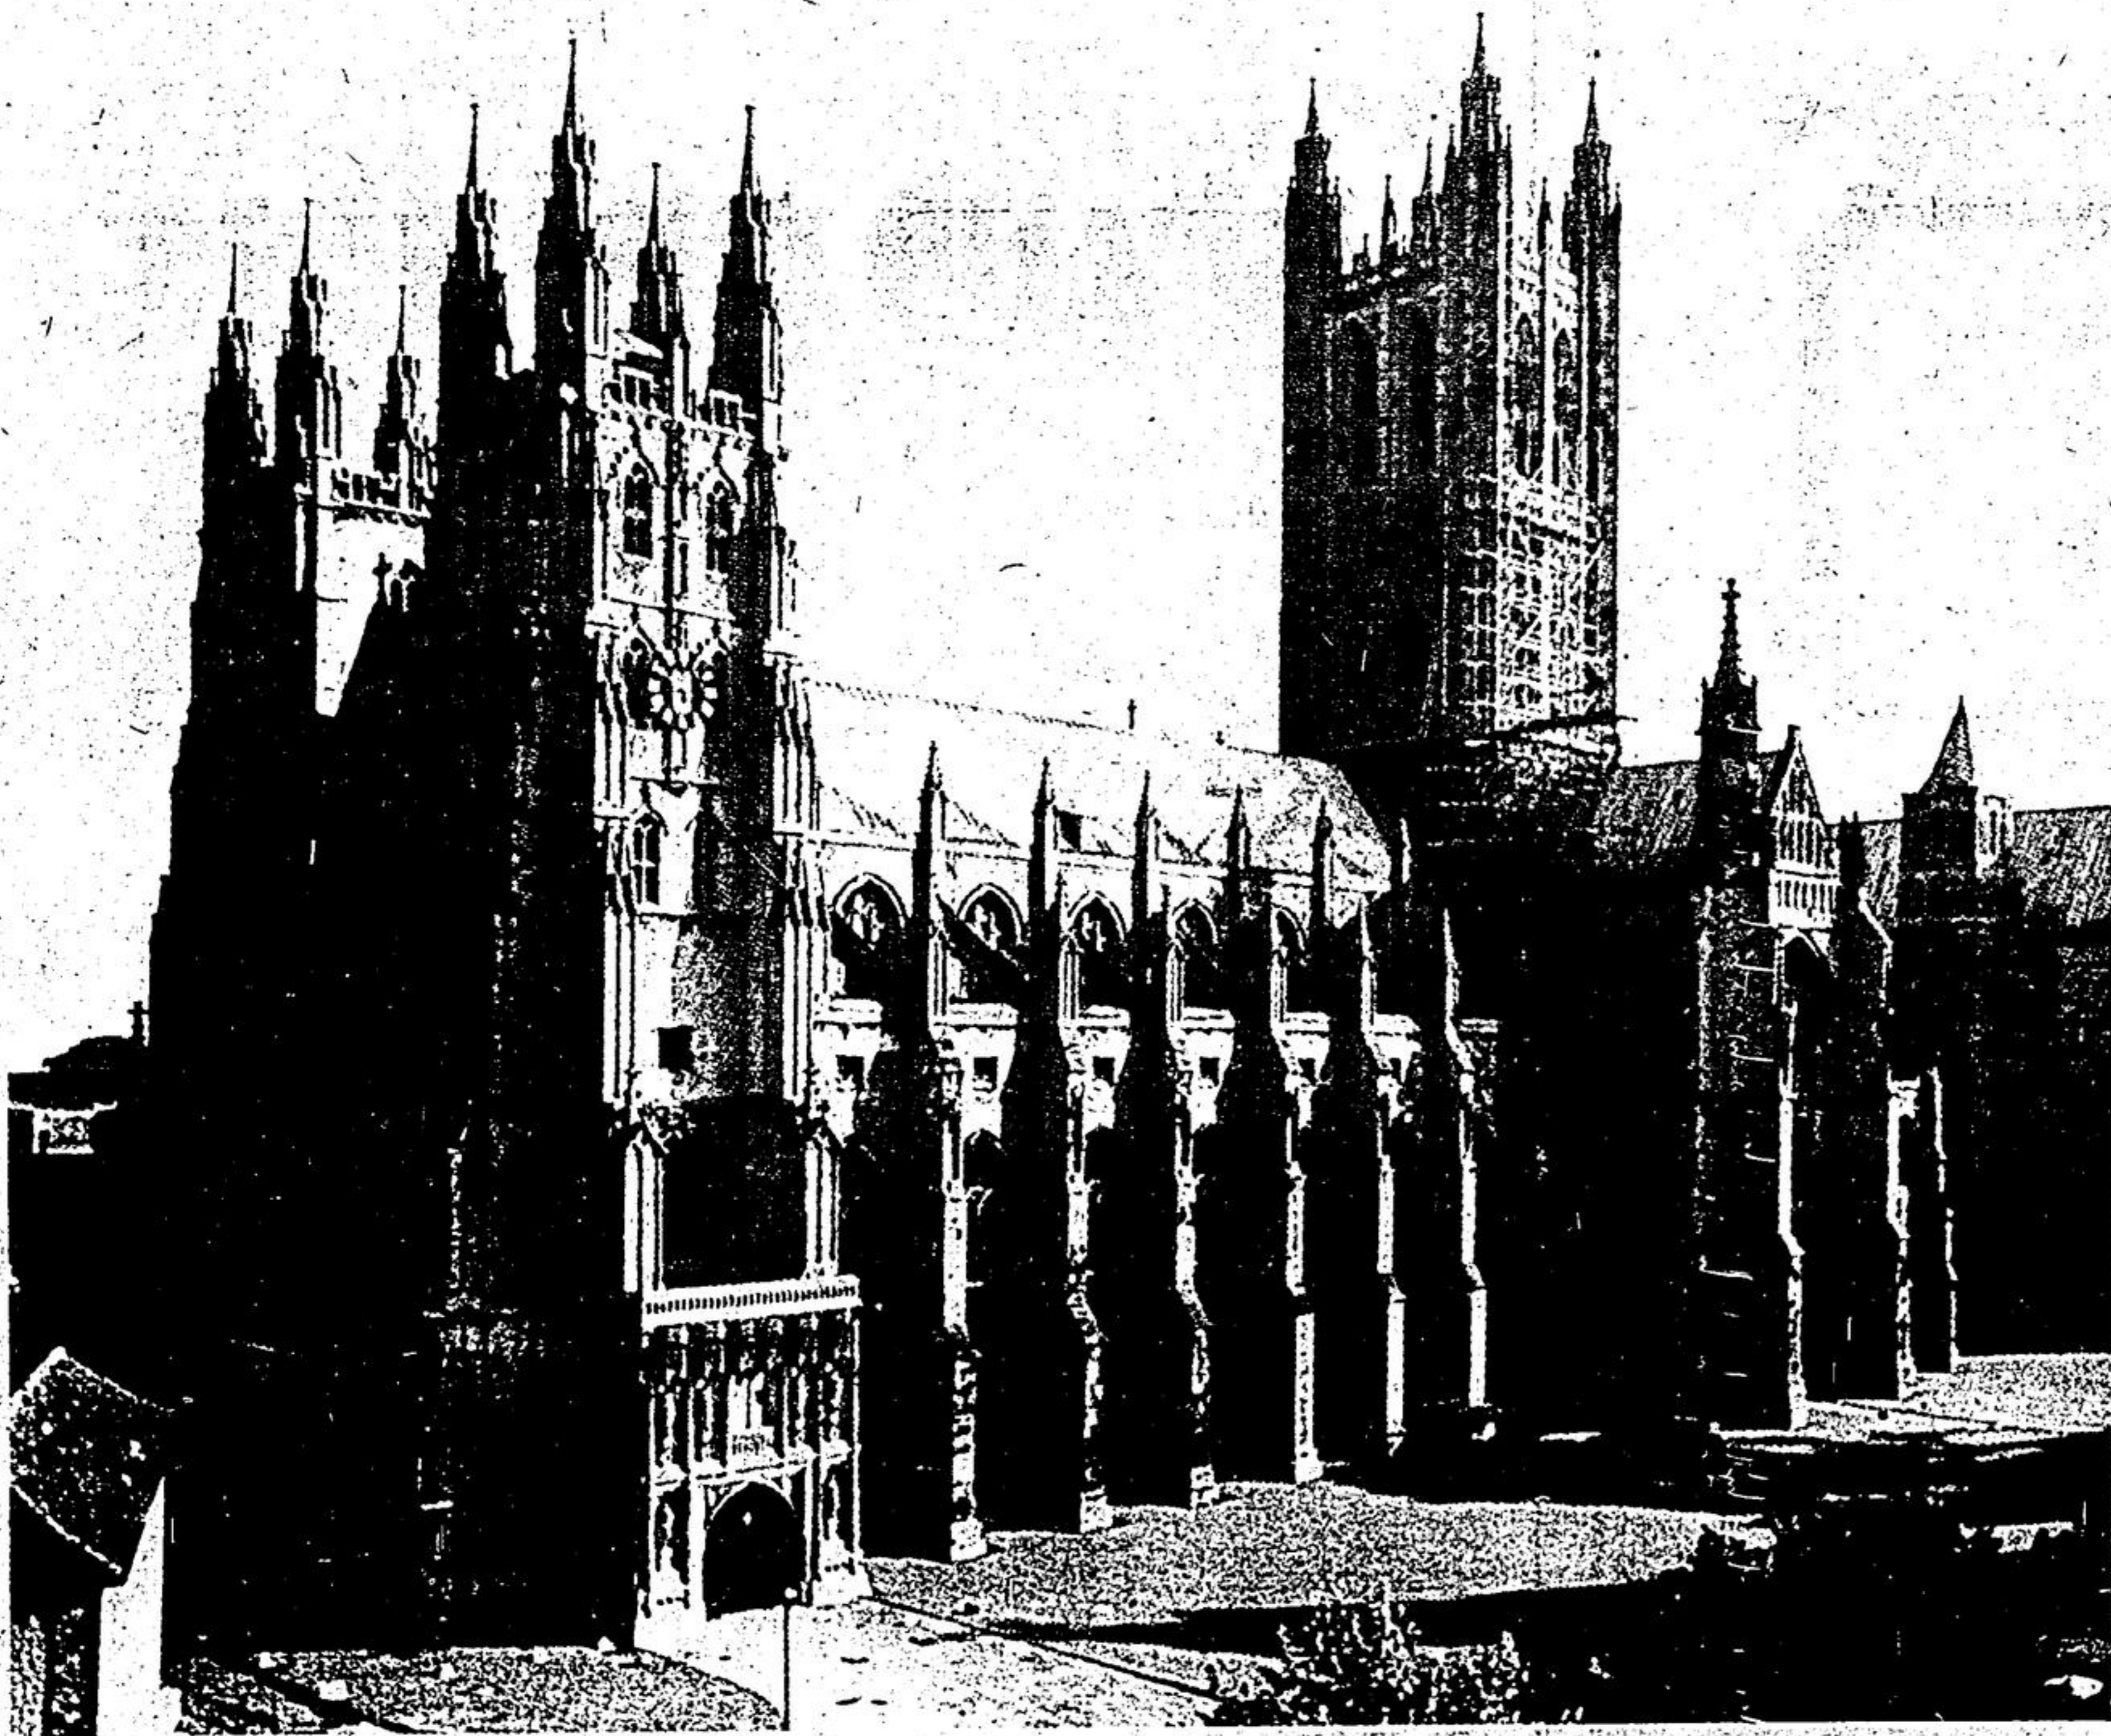

Hirsute men vie for honours

Choosing the winners in the centennial beard growing contest turned out to be a hairy experience for the overwhelmed judges. Almost 90 men were entered in the contest and they all had to parade up on the stage and show off their pride and joy to the hundreds of spectators and the judges. The throng took up three full-length rows on the stage. The men continually asked to moved forward or back so the judges could scrutinize their growths a little more closely. Finally after a long deliberation the judges handed in the winners of the five categories. In the overall category John Foulds was declared the winner. Other winners were William Giles for the best beard under 21, Cliff Dunkeld for the most original beard, Ron Berry for the neatest and the last, but certainly not the least, Ed Macdonald for the fullest beard.

Ed MacAloney tips his hat to the crowd as he parades around on stage in the judging for the best men's costume at the Homecoming Weekend celebrations. Mr. MacAloney failed to walk off with first place in that division, but he and his family did win the prize for the best costumed family. —Keith Bolender

St. Augustine founded it.
Becket died for it.
Chaucer wrote about it.
Hitler bombed it.
Time is destroying it.

Everything from tadpoles to horses was entered in the Children's Pet Show on Homecoming weekend. This mouse won a prize as the second smallest entry. —Annegret Lamure

Old bugs never die.

If you ever stop to think about it, you'll notice there's an awful lot of Bugs on the road. Old ones, new ones. Sometimes it's hard to tell the difference.

The beauty of the Bug is that the basic design is so good, it's hardly changed in years. That's why we'd be happy to show you one of our used Bugs.

On the car lot they all look gleaming and new. That's because we recondition them, inside and out, so they're almost as good as new. Then we guarantee them.

So drop in sometime and look at our used Bugs. We like to think that even an old Bug makes more sense than a lot of new cars on the road. Think about that for a minute.
