PERSONAL DEVELOPMENT

Literature for Women

Shelley Sywak is a graduate of the University of Toronto with her Master of Arts in English Literature. During Mrs. Sywak's university career she became increasingly aware that education is not the domain of the young or exceptionally bright but the right of all those with the desire to complete themselves as intellectual and social beings.

It has become her ambition to aid in the education and encouragement of women to whom the standard route of education is either not open or not desirable. She has, therefore, developed several courses which she feels would both appeal to and benefit the woman who wishes to use literature as the path by which she expands her understanding of herself and others.

Reading for Parents

This is a course of selective reading for the parent who wants to both understand what is available in literature for young people and guide his/her children's growth by encouraging them in developmental reading.

Fiction by Women

This is a survey course of the works written by women. The emphasis will be on the works as literature, with side trips into the differences between male and female writers, the female author's attitude towards her world and a woman's role in that world, and the changing position of women in the world of literature.
