Criticism of police in Metro is causing a backlash in York.

YORK REGION

Citizens within the region are showing their concern by voicing strong support for officers here, Chief Bruce Crawford told Commission meeting, last week. In recent days, the department's been flooded with mail, all backing the force and police in general, he said.

Several were opened in public. Of these, a number expressed appreciation for services rendered, while others, the result of encounters with the law, still pointed to the courteous way they were treated. One was signed by twenty-six senior citizens from King City. It read in part: "We are shocked and distressed by the animosity shown by certain sectors of the community towards the police who, in our opinion, are doing a wonderful job". Thanks to a police department that looks after our safety, Canada is still safer than anywhere else in the world, it said.

The letter was sent "to show our appreciation and respect for such a fine body of men".
