Anglican Church Communion form placed on trial

The people of the Anglican Church of Canada are being asked to "try out" a new, modernized form of their Communion Service or Holy Eucharist. Strangely, however, it is not expected to cause anything like the furor a complete new Prayer Book has caused south of the border in the Episcopal Church in the U.S.A. even though Canada's new rite shares much in common with that book.

The group responsible for creating the new service is the Doctrine & Worship Committee of the General Synod of the Church. Its Chairman, the Rt. Rev. H.V.R. Short, Bishop of the Diocese of Saskatchewan, commenting on whether the new Eucharist will cause controversy in the Church said, "I think there will be some, and I think we have to proceed very slowly. People love the Prayer-Book as they've known it. They love the language even if they don't always understand, and I'm not absolutely persuaded how important lucidity is when you're talking poetry."

The Bishop said, "I really hesitate to talk about new forms, they're not new. The shape is the same but there are certain things revised. The language is different. That is something which I think causes more distress than anything else - the fact that the Elizabethan language of the familiar Book of Common Prayer has been left behind."

The new Communion Service is available now in booklet form so that congregations can actually use it and get a

"feel" for it before it is presented for acceptance at the church's General Synod in June 1980. Bishop Short cautioned, "I want to make it quite clear that the Doctrine & Worship Committee is not a self-appointed authority trying to push something on the Church. The National Executive Council approved this publication and the Bishops are free to use it or not as they choose. We have submitted it to the Church at large, to the N.E.C., to the House of Bishops and we are planning to present this to General Synod."

Even if General Synod does pass the new Eucharist it will not replace the present Prayer Book version. It will be available as an alternate, just as there are already modern versions of the Baptism, Marriage and Burial Offices which earlier received the approval of General Synod and are now in use as alternative Services.

Another member of the Doctrine & Worship Committee, the Ven. John McMullin pointed out one of the interesting aspects of the new Eucharist. Because of similar revisions going on in other countries and a m o n g several denominations, there is a kind of "leveling off" going on so that American and English Anglicans, and Canadian Lutherans and Roman Catholics would feel very much at home with the new Anglican Eucharist.

Copies of the proposed new liturgy are available from the Anglican Book Centre, 600 Jarvis St., Toronto M4Y 2J6.

Phony cheque to buy food

MARKHAM - A 39-year-old Markham man, charged with false pretenses, was placed on a suspended sentence and a twelve month term of probation following his conviction before Judge F.D. White in Newmarket Court.

John E. Phillips was charged by police with writing a worthless cheque in the amount of $575 on the Bank of Montreal.

The accused told the court he used the money to buy groceries and other essentials. He admitted he had funds tied up in bonds that would have covered the amount. "I could have used them, but didn't," he said.
