Lauds graduates "Our future leaders"

STOUFFVILLE — "You are our greatest natural resource and the future leaders of society. Learn from your experiences and make good choices in the years ahead!"

These words were spoken by Father James Adams in his address to the Grade 8 graduation class at St. Mark's Separate School. "This school is a better place because you were here," he said.

The following students were honored through the presentation of awards: School Letters - Lynn van Maris, Elizabeth Tosney, Ted Brunt, Cathy Morin, Sandra Bianchi, Debbi Heard, Michael Edwards, Rosa Turco, Greg Shearstone, Bernie Schopf, Eileen O'Connor, Teresa Foulds, Proficiency Award - Bernie Schopf and Cathy Morin. History Award - Eileen O'Connor, Gabriele Petramala, Bernie Schopf, Michelle Shearstone, Luigi Tesoro, Rosa Turco, Stephen Altilia, Phillip Attenborough, Sandra Bianchi, Ted Brunt, Ken Cornelisse, Michael Edwards, Andrew Harris, Debbi Heard, Denise Hembruff, John Klein, Darin Lacourt, Joanne Morra, Anna Papizzo, Cristina Rea, Greg Shearstone, John Suk, Elizabeth Tosney and Lynn van Maris.

A camera that talks to itself? Sort of. The new sonar auto-focusing cameras from Polaroid send out sound waves that echo to the subject and back — automatically setting the lens at the precise focus for a perfect instant picture.

Cameras that "talk" assure sharp focus

As photographic films and lenses become faster (that is, more sensitive) and flash becomes easier to carry and more automatic, it becomes evident that you can shoot anything you can see. But what about things you can't see? Like the garden party that's still going strong at midnight. There are pictures there, but where?

Focusing has always been the principle stumbling block for serious — and even unserious — photographers. As soon as you leave the innocent world of fixed-focus lenses, you're on your own. And every day the sun goes down.

Even during the day you find yourself in rooms that defy precise focusing. Or is it the camera and its confounded ground glass — or lines which refuse to line up — that's the problem? By the time you're ready to shoot that marvelous unposed picture, it's posed — or gone.

The problem has been solved by the same people who brought you the wonder of instant photographs. How does it work? Fast — in milliseconds! With echoing sound waves. Faster than you can focus a camera manually. As fast as you can press the button to shoot the picture!

And how accurately does it focus? Down to millimeters! More accurately, usually, than normal eyesight can focus.

But isn't it just the latest instance of gadgetry for the sake of gadgetry, another encumbrance for the camera's — and the photographer's — pure vision? Well, freeing you to do the seeing and dispense with the fumbling is the whole idea behind it. The mechanism adds virtually no weight to the camera, and fits snugly into the housing. But now you can stop saying, "It's in focus, it's not in focus. It's in focus, it's not in focus."

It's in focus!

Summitview School Students receive coveted Letters

STOUFFVILLE — Seven students, five from Grade 7 and two from Grade 6, received General Proficiency Awards when Summitview School held its athletic and academic assemblies last week.

These prizes, represented by the letter 'S', were presented to Christine Kuhn and Marc Meyer (Grade 6); Chris Garbutt, Cheryl Good, Neil Jones, Meredith McDonald and David Spensley (Grade 7).

One Letter comprises three academic awards, one citizenship award plus six other noteworthy achievements. The 'S' is the most coveted of prizes in the Summitview system.

For the first time, the Bethesda Women's Institute offered a plaque to the student showing "the greatest improvement". The winner this year was Darryl Brown.

Subject awards went to the following: Cheryl Good, English; Stewart Hazell, Math; Chris Barbutt, Geography; Meredith McDonald and Chris Garbutt, Oral French. Kevin Brown received an Achievement Medal and Mike Grove was presented with the Gourley Achievement Award.

Citizenship prizes went to Andrew Alles and Meredith McDonald.

Staff changes

STOUFFVILLE — Three teachers won't be answering the role call at Summitview School when the fall term comes around in September.

Patricia Blake has moved over to Thornhill Public School; Bob Richardson will be teaching music out of Oak Ridges and Linda Lyons has accepted a position at Ballantrae.

Resigns

DICKSON'S HILL — Only one staff change is contemplated at Dickson's Hill School in September.

Mark Dennington, a teacher in both the junior and intermediate divisions, is leaving the profession after five years here.
