Playthings important
 By Lynne Brooks
 A baby's first playthings are important. They should offer entertainment, stimulation and exercise. They can provide good first experiences in looking, listening, and touching.
 Parents know that babies need lots of loving attention, but it is easy to forget that they also need time by themselves to figure out the wonders of the new world around them.
 There are a number of toys on the market that can help in this figuring-out process. For instance: Colourful, musical mobiles stimulate babies eyes and ears as well as amuse them. Crib gyms provide opportunities for exercise and the development of hand-eye coordination. An Activity Box has things that move and make fascinating sounds when baby pokes or pushes them.
 Such toys help to make a Baby's first investigations safe, successful learning experiences. They're fun, too!
 Some manufacturers' names to keep in mind when looking for well-made, safe children's toys are: Child Guidance Toys, The Children's Design Centre, Fisher-Price Toys, and Johnston & Johnston Playpath Playthings.
