Bethlehem's star inspires speculation

"And, lo, the star, which they saw in the east, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was!"

This description by Matthew of the Wise Men's visit to the Christ Child has caused speculation for centuries about the nature of that star.

While some believe that there is no natural explanation for this star seen in the east by the Wise Men, others have attempted to find an astronomical explanation for the phenomenon.

It is important to realize how much the people of Christ's time depended on astrology, scientists have pointed out.

A configuration of Jupiter, Saturn and Mars that occurred in February of 6 B.C. is considered as a possibility in searching for the star of Bethlehem. It is believed that such a massing of planets must have been quite spectacular, and of sufficient import to have caused the Magi to travel great distances. Since the exact year of Christ's birth is not known, (the year A.D. 1 was selected by Dionysius in the mistaken idea that Jesus was born in the 28th year of the reign of Emperor Augustus) this date is a distinct possibility.

Another explanation is that the "star" was in fact the glow caused by Jupiter passing Saturn in the year 6 B.C.

Whatever the explanation for the star of Bethlehem — natural or supernatural — the faithful will continue to follow its guiding light to find the Infant Jesus, even as the Wise Men did two thousand years ago.
