No rationing in Markham

The weather has been hot and dry lately, but it doesn't mean we should all start worrying about our water supply.

That's the word from water superintendents from Markham and Metro Toronto, where Markham's drinking water comes from Lake Ontario.

At one time, this area had frequent periods of water rationing in the summer. That was due to depletion of the town's numerous wells. But that situation began changing in 1972, when Markham, in phases, began switching onto Metro Toronto-supplied water. The switch was completed two years ago and since then, there has been no summertime water rationing.

"As far as we know, the water supply is okay," said Markham Water Works Superintendent Jerry Klaus.

While he can't predict whether the situation would remain that way, Metro Toronto's Assistant Director of Water Supply can.

"We probably went through a peak 10 days ago," said John Carnduff. "We haven't had any difficulties and we don't anticipate any. It would have to be a very large demand to cause any problems."

Approval given for borrowing

Markham council has given approval for town officials to borrow almost $2 million if they need it.

A bylaw was passed authorizing the temporary borrowing of $1,950,000 to pay current expenditures until taxes are collected.

Regional Councillor Ron Moran said taxes are collected in the spring and fall, but "in the first part of the year, we don't have any money in."
