Avoid confusion in picking china

Choosing your china, crystal and silver patterns can be confusing with so many varieties available.

Here are some guidelines to help you avoid major pitfalls.

Select a china pattern first, since china is the focal point of your table and forms the backdrop for whatever you serve. A basic china pattern for the main service and some colorful auxiliary pieces will provide you with enough flexibility to serve a variety of cuisines. White porcelain with a simple gold or silver band is one of the most versatile choices for a service. Soup, salad and dessert can be served in bowls and plates in any number of unusual patterns that you collect as you go along.

A handy rule of thumb: At least one of your choices - china, crystal or silver - should be a simple pattern. If you choose ornate silver, for example, your crystal will usually look best if it is less elaborate and your china if it is plain and subdued. Beware of too much simplicity, however; the result can be monotony.

In co-ordinating the three patterns, look for some sort of kinship between them, but don't strive for an identical match. Rose-strewn china matched with rose-etched crystal and rose patterned silver does not a lovely table make, unless your guests are looking through rose-colored glasses. Instead, pick up just the leaf of a china pattern, or perhaps just the feel of a design to make your table inviting.

Strive for comfort in your selections. Silver should be well-balanced and feel good in your hand. The same hold true for crystal.
