

Regional police recruiting volunteers

Interested in helping your local police force? Here's an opportunity. The York Regional Police Force is presently recruiting interested members of the community to expand its Auxiliary Police Organization. Members of the auxiliary will be trained to perform such duties as crowd control, foot patrol, car patrol, traffic points guarding crime scenes and assisting in searches. In a release, Inspector Lowell McCleary, auxiliary liaison officer for the York Region Force, explained that although auxiliary members will not be armed, they will undergo firearm training on various weapons used by the force. Initial training requires one evening per week for 32 weeks. Recruits receive training in first aid, the laws pertaining to the Criminal Code of Canada, the Highway Traffic Act, the powers and duties of a police officer, and other associated subjects. At the completion of the training period, auxiliary members will be required to devote at least eight hours per month to field duties, in addition to attending one, two-hour training session per month. Inspector McCleary said members of the Auxiliary Force are not paid a salary, but are given a mileage allowance when attending special events within the region. They are also covered by workmen's compensation and insurance while on duty. The selection process is similar to the one that exists for regular force members and includes a complete character investigation and psychological testing. Applicants must be 21 years of age and no older than 50 years of age; be a Canadian citizen; and be of good moral character and habits. Male applicants must be a minimum of five feet, eight inches in height and weigh at least 160 pounds.
