Tractor's a 'monster'

Owners can plow up to ten acres per hour

Few tractors in the area can match the size and power of this 'monster' owned by Lambert Yake and John Hoover. It's a Steiger, manufactured in North Dakota and powered by a 280 h.p. Caterpillar diesel engine. It weighs close to 20 tons and would cost about $140,000 new. Pulling a ten-furrow plow, it can turn up to ten acres an hour. Lambert and John, (L & J Farms), with the help of this 'baby', cultivate more than 2,000 acres. That's Lambert's son Corey, 12, on top of the big machine with Lambert in the centre. —Jim Thomas

Editor's Mail

They can 'take a hike'

Dear Editor:

On occasions, in your Roaming Around column, you've talked about picking up hitchhikers on the highway, even people you don't know. We all do it from time to time, often against our better judgments. I'd like to relate an experience I had recently that will be a lesson against this practice for as long as I live.

It was raining as I approached the intersection of Hwys. 47 and 48, (Ringwood). Two young girls were hitchhiking there. I felt sorry for them, so stopped. One got in the front seat and the other in the back.

About two miles down Hwy. 48, the two began arguing. One wanted to stop and visit her boyfriend and the other wanted to go straight home.

I didn't know what to do, but kept on driving while the pair (I think they were sisters), kept on yattering back and forth.

Finally, the one in the back said if I didn't stop, she'd wind down the window and holler 'rape'. She sounded like she meant it. She even started to open the door as if to jump out.

At this point, I pulled over and ordered both of them out. As I drove away, I could see they were still arguing on the side of the road.

I wonder what would have happened (to me) if the girl had followed through on her threat and a police officer had happened by? I'd have had some tall explaining to do.

Is it any wonder people think twice before picking up hitchhikers. I've learned my lesson.

Sincerely,

Stuart McNicoll,
