

New challenge in retirement years

By ERKKI POHJOLAINEN
WHITCHURCH — John Watling sought a hobby to help pass the time as he neared age 65 and a forced retirement. His work with stained glass began as just that — a hobby. But now, it's more like a full-time job.

Helen Watling, John's wife, also does creative work that occupies most of her time. And this too began as a hobby. Together, they form Jaylor Enterprises on the Bloomington Road east of Hwy. 48, specializing in stained glass, ceramics, knitting and folk art. A renovated kennel, beside their house, is now a studio. Walking into the converted dog house, one sees a vast array of art, ranging from glossy ceramic figurines to fruit baskets, painted in a rainbow of colors in infinite detail. The second room is John's shop where sunlight, filtered through stained glass, splashes on the walls and floor flooding it with a spectrum of hues.

"We're not in it to break our backs," the 69-year-old retired electrical engineer said in the studio. "We did that for 30 years with the dogs (Great Danes). We're just doing this to supplement our pensions."

As an electrical engineer for the province, John was away from home much of the time. "I liked my job," he said comparing it to what he does now. "I used to work with high voltage electrical equipment in hospitals and institutions throughout the province. Working with little pieces of glass is sure different."

John suffered a coronary several years ago and had a stroke a year later. But that hasn't slowed him down. On top of working at his craft about five hours a day, he teaches three, three-hour classes a week.

"About a year after I started doing stained glass, I was recommended as a teacher," John said. Soon after, he began holding evening classes at Stouffville Dist. Secondary School, Wednesdays; King City Secondary School, Mondays and in his own shop, Tuesdays.

As well, Mr. Watling repairs stained glass, "some over a hundred years old."

Mrs. Watling explained she started her hobbies about five years ago, a year before her husband, intending to make gifts for relatives. But after several years, she said, "there was so much work all over the house that we had to move it out." That's why they renovated the empty kennel.

They had stopped breeding Great Danes several years earlier because, as Helen said, "the work got to be too much," pointing out she didn't feel right about leaving the dogs for someone else to look after.

The Watlings have sold their work at several locations, including the Arabian Horse Show at the Canadian National Exhibition and a 10-day display at Canada's Wonderland.

"It's a lot of work carrying your stuff around," John said, expressing his reluctance to do more exhibitions.

"We sold a lot of ceramics but not much glass," he said, recalling the crowd at the Arabian show. "People would rather spend $500 on a saddle than on stained glass."

Looking back, John said he would have liked to discover the joy of doing stained glass years earlier. But, he said, hindsight is pointless, adding he enjoyed working as an engineer and he enjoys his work now. For John and Helen Watling, that's all that really matters.

Rights eroded physician claims

To the Editor:

The concern expressed by most of Ontario's 7,500 Family Doctors who oppose the Peterson government's proposed Health Care Accessibility Act, deserves special attention.

Unlike many of our physician colleagues, most Family Doctors (greater than 95 per cent), are NOT opted out and DO NOT "extra bill". Our concern is for our patients and the future of our health care system. Our fight is for the freedom of those of us living and practicing medicine in a country which once took pride in protecting the rights and respecting the integrity of individuals such as ourselves.

Over the past decade, the costs involved in maintaining a quality health care system have escalated and the public purse has been stretched beyond its capacity to afford the resources required. Rather than admitting its failure to come to grips with this scenario, governments have found it politically expedient to create the myth that paying doctors is the problem.

As Family Doctors whose role each day is to act as advocates on behalf of those for whom we care, we are asking our elected officials to review the facts and to address the real issues of concern to our patients.

We applaud any discussion which honestly addresses the issue of "accessibility", but surely, when we speak of better access, we must be speaking about issues such as improving the facilities and resources available to care for the elderly, the disabled, the abused, and the underprivileged. Surely we must be referring to the need for increased community services, improved home care programs, and more appropriate utilization of our hospitals for both in-patient and outpatient care. Surely we must recognize that it is in areas such as these that the real problems with accessibility to health care exist.

For most Family Physicians, passage of the Peterson government health bill will have little or no impact upon our incomes, but will have major impact upon our freedom and our rights. For most of our patients, passage of this Act will make little or no difference with respect to their access to doctors, but it will also do nothing with respect to improving their access to other vital health care needs.

The real problem, facing not only doctors but all Canadians, is not "extra-billing". It is the ongoing trend towards underfunding and the resultant deterioration of our health care system.

The real dilemma facing the population of Ontario today is not related simply to accessibility to health care. It is rather more significantly the question of accessibility to political wisdom.

Sincerely,
Calvin Gutkin, M.D.,

HYUNDAI DOES IT AGAIN

HYUNDAI EXCEL. THE ONE THAT MAKES UNCOMMON SENSE.

Here's front-wheel-drive. A totally modern, independent front and rear suspension system. Excellent fuel economy. Plenty of luggage space. Sporty European styling...and the list goes on. Including a whole winter of cold weather testing in northern Canada. In a word, value. Excel is so much car for such an uncommon price. Visit any Hyundai showroom and you'll see what we mean.

Every Excel comes with styled steel wheels.

Michelin all-season, steel-belted radials are standard.

Excel is extremely manoeuvrable, thanks to front-wheel-drive.

HYUNDAI EXCEL. TODAY'S WORD FOR VALUE.

"They told me well-insulated homes don't need 'em — but my dry nose tells me different."

Even a new house may need a humidifier to maintain comfortable levels of humidity. With an Aprilaire humidifier, you can help relieve the dry nose, itchy skin, scratchy throat, and static electricity that result from parched air. Aprilaire helps save energy and heating costs, too.
