

Roadside selling rule should be for all: reader

Dear Sir:
With respect to new rules governing vendors selling products on regional road allowances, I'd appreciate answers to the following questions:
(1) Will the same ruling apply to Stouffville merchants who sell products in front of their stores, even on the sidewalk? There is also the Mid-Night Madness Sale. Is this not a mini flea market as our mayor likes to call yard sales? I see no difference to merchants selling items on the sidewalk and people selling products on the road allowance.

(2) What about signs erected on the roadside? If vendors can't put up signs to advertise their products or direct people to auction sales and yard sales, what about all the signs one sees all over the countryside and in town, those that publicize blood donor clinics, Markham Fair and our own Strawberry Festival? And what about election signs? You see them everywhere at election times—on regional roads too.

If I can't use the road allowance to advertise produce, then politicians shouldn't be able to stick up signs right in front of my house at election time.
What about open house and real estate signs? Are these firms to be charged $250 and up?

I hope York Region clarifies its ruling before election summonses.
Sincerely,
Vera Clarkson,
Stouffville
